CEPHALUS AND PROCRIS.

Description of the Frontispiece to Volume Thirty-six.

FABULOUS History thus informs us of the subjects of this Engraving:

"Cephalus, son of Deioneus, king of Thessaly, by Diomede, daughter of Xuthus, married Procris, daughter of Erechtheus, king of Athens. Aurora fell in love with him, and carried him away; but he refused to listen to her addresses, and was impatient to return to Procris. The goddess sent him back; and to try the fidelity of his wife, she made him put on a different form, and he arrived at the house of Procris in the habit of a merchant. Procris was deaf to every offer; but she suffered herself to be seduced by the gold of this stranger, who discovered himself the very moment that Procris had yielded up her virtue. This circumstance so ashamed Procris, that she fled from her husband, and devoted herself to hunting in the island of Eubœa, where she was admitted among the attendants of Diana, who presented her with a dog always sure of his prey, and a dart which never missed its aim, and always returned to the hands of its mistress of its own accord.—Some say that the dog was a present from Minos, because Procris had cured his wounds. After this Procris returned in disguise to Cephalus, who was willing to disgrace himself by some unnatural concessions, to obtain the dog and the dart of Procris. Procris discovered herself at the moment that Cephalus shewed himself faithless, and a reconciliation was easily made between them. They loved one another with more tenderness than before, and Cephalus received from his wife the presents of Diana. As he was particularly fond of hunting, he every morning early repaired to the woods, and after much toil and fatigue, laid himself down in the cool shade, and earnestly called for Aura, or the refreshing breeze. This ambiguous word was mistaken for the name of a mistress; and some informer reported to the jealous Procris, that Cephalus daily paid a visit to a mistress, whose name was Aura. Procris too readily believed the information, and secretly followed her husband into the woods. According to his daily custom, Cephalus retired to the cool, and called after Aura. At the name of Aura, Procris eagerly lifted up her head to see her expected rival. Her motion occasioned a rustling among the leaves of the bush that concealed her; and as Cephalus listened, he thought it to be a wild beast, and he let fly his unerring dart. Procris was struck to the heart, and instantly expired in the arms of her husband, confessing that ill-grounded jealousy was the cause of her death."

ON PRESCRIPTIONS FOR THE COLIC IN HORSES,

And on Veterinary Compilations.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

A Month or two past, there was, in your Magazine, a recommendation of laudanum and water, as a remedy for the colic, or gripes, in horses. Now, although it be allowed on all hands, that preparations of opium form a proper and beneficial article in the compositions prescribed in most species of this disease, yet that is not so generally acknowledged of opiates by themselves; and farther, we know from the best authority, and on the experiences of a number of unfortunate cases, that the stomach and intestines of a horse may be in such state, as to render the exhibition of opium, or its preparations, dangerous. Dr. Bracken, many years ago, gave cautions on the use of this most excellent drug, and Saintbel remarked on the difficulty of hitting the precise and critical point of time, in which to administer opium. Since them, another practical writer has particularised those species of gripes, in which the use of laudanum may be fatal, giving an example of a horse killed very speedily by a large dose. Notwithstanding this, it will be acknowledged, that opiates may, or rather ought, to form a part of most prescriptions in the case, but it should be under the care of a judicious prescriber, and not of a person who is merely able to read and handle that edge-tool, commonly called a receipt. Doubtless, on the recommendation and example of the celebrated John Browne, laudanum has been more freely used, both with man and beast, than in earlier times, but in various cases with dangerous effects, as the present writer has witnessed.

I embrace this opportunity, as an old friend, to remind you, that the Sporting Magazine, as well as an extensive circulation in town and country, enjoys a very respectable reputation, which you will do wisely not to put to the risk, by warranting the goodness and practical use of compilations on horses and cattle, a species of publication notorious, even through centuries past, for that ignorance and deception, on which very harsh censures have, at various periods, been most deservedly bestowed. The mischiefs done in former days, and the horrid cruelties practised on poor horses, by ignorant farriers and grooms, who doctored from the prescriptions of their famous text-book, 'Markham's Maister-piece,' and others of that stamp, were incalculable; and so well convinced of this were many sportsmen and proprietors of horses, by the cautions on this subject of a writer of the present day, that they absolutely seized on Markham's books, whenever they found them in the possession of their grooms, and committed them to the flames. In books of this description, the prescriptions of which are copied off, from one to the other, without the smallest knowledge in the compiler, excepting of the form of words, we often find medicinal articles, not only which have no natural relation to the cure, but even too often a principle in direct opposition to such intent. Surely the cruelty of such conduct simply considered, thus to keep additional pains and inflictions upon a poor animal already under the tortures of disease, ought to pass for something in the view of reason and humanity. And we are not to suppose, suppose, Mr. Editor, that the race of the Markham's is yet totally extinct however superior our light and science in the present day; since, no longer ago than last year, a most dangerous prescription, in one of their catch-pennies, was exposed, and some of our chief sportsmen warned with respect to their servants. The infernal mess alluded to, has the additional disadvantage of being ordered for race-horses, hunters, and those of the greatest value, to which it might do a lasting injury, and not improbably, in some cases, occasion instant death —a pretty sort of plaything in the hands of an ignorant and inconsiderate groom.

My earliest communication to your valuable miscellany, bears the date of nearly twenty years past, whence I may boast of the honour of being, Sir, and it is with much respect and the best wishes, your

OLD CORRESPONDENT.

DISPUTES

BETWEEN GENTLEMEN,

On Points of Honour, &c. &c.

O. P. versus Messrs. Harris and Kemble.

A Very serious dispute took place at Covent-Garden Theatre, at the commencement of the dramatic entertainments last year, on the opening of the new Theatre, in consequence of a presumed infraction on the privileges of the audience, by the managers, who had erected a range of private boxes on the third tier, to the exclusion of all auditors who were not willing, or rich enough, to subscribe for a perticipation in those receptacles.

After a most unprecedented struggle between the parties at issue, which lasted for several weeks, a public meeting of the O. P's. was called at the Crown and Anchor Tavern, at which Mr. Clifford the counsel presided, for the purpose of arranging future measures: and this meeting, which had the most unfriendly aspect towards the managers, was terminated to the advantage of all; as Mr. Kemble attended, and held a species of convention with the principals of that meeting, at which it was stipulated that, during the annual shutting up of the Theatre, the private boxes, which had been the cause of so much displeasure and violence, should be removed, and the Theatre be restored to the same state as it was previous to the assumption of the management by Mr. Kemble.

On this felicitous occasion the hatchet of war and annimosity was buried by mutual consent; the prosecutions that had been commenced, on either side, were all abandoned; and the drama was represented, once more, without opposition.

At the beginning of the present season, at Covent Garden Theatre, the audience perceived, on their entrance, that eight boxes had been untouched, which, in their ideas, ought to have been removed, in pursuance of the letter of that obligation which Mr. Kemble had previously promised to fulfil. In consequence of this measure, that part of the audience, who called themselves the representatives of the town, clamoured loudly, for the whole performance of the Contract; and, during the first four nights, there was a renewal of those hideous outrages upon public decency, over which, it was supposed, the veil of oblivion had been drawn for ever!

Every liberal individual deeply regretted this renewal of hostilities, and and Mr. Kemble urged in his defence, that the last audience of the late season, to whom he disclosed publicly the state of the Theatre, had generously consented that the managers should retain as many of the private boxes as there were in the old Theatre, immediately preceding that calamitous fire which had destroyed their valuable and fine property.

Notwithstanding there was much solid reasoning in this appeal, it had not the desired effect; the audience (the Pit we mean) insisted upon the fulfilment of every iota of the bond; and, at length, the managers again gave way, to preserve the general peace, and the private boxes are now reduced to six on each side.

Now which of the parties have fallen the more widely off from the obligations of honour in the prosecution and issue of this unpleasant transaction; the managers, or that portion of the audience, who have arrogated to themselves the capacity and honour of representing the British public?

After reviewing the whole progress and bearing of this case, it is our opinion, that John Bull hath exercised a severity of administration on this point, which is not altogether congenial with his national character:—We should be, and are, decidedly adverse to any act of an arbitrary nature, that might be perpetrated by the managers of our Theatres to the disadvantage of the public, or the injury of the drama; yet, on an event of sweeping destruction, whereby those managers had lost the whole of their splendid establishment, we think that a less rigorous enforcement of the will and prejudices of a triumphant multitude, would have been more truly honourable.

"It is well to have a giant's strength,
But we should not always use it like a giant."

W.

Under this head of "Disputes between Gentlemen, on Points of Honour, &c." we shall briefly state the proceedings of a General Court Martial held at Chelsea College, on the 6th of last month (August) and the following days, for the purpose of investigating charges preferred by Colonel Sir John Eamer, commanding the Royal East London Regiment of Militia, against Captain Charles Burghurst Brown, and Lieutenant J. Zouche, belonging to the said regiment of Militia. The Court met at ten o'clock, when the names of the members, and that of Colonel Beaufoy, of the Tower Hamlets Regiment of Militia, who was President, being called over, and the usual formalities gone through, the following charges were then exhibited by the Hon. Manners Sutton, the Deputy Judge Advocate, viz.

First Charge against Captain Brown—For having on or about the 15th of May last, absented himself from the said regiment of Militia, without leave.

Second Charge against Captain Brown, and Lieutenant Zouche—For unofficerlike conduct, in causing the following placard to be printed, by order of Capt. Brown, and which was proposed and drawn up by Lieutenant Zouche, at the Garrick's Head in Bow-street, in the month of May last, tending to seriously injure the honour and character of Colonel Sir John Eamer; and ordered the same to be posted in various parts of the streets in this metropolis, and the roads leading thereto, in May last.

PLACARD

PLACARD.

"Colonel Sir John Eamer, of the East London Militia, Knight Alderman, and Grocer.—Whereas Colonel Sir John Eamer has thought proper to put Captain Brown, of the above-mentioned regiment, under close arrest, for non-attendance at parade, occasioned by the lameness of his horse, on his return to London, from Ely, in Cambridgeshire, to which place he (Captain Brown) had leave to go, and from which place Captain Brown apprised Sir John Eamer by letter of this circumstance—This is to acquaint the friends and acquaintance of the said Captain Brown, desirous of giving him their advice and assistance, that he will be happy to consult with them daily at the Garrick's Head,* Bow-street, Covent Garden, from nine o'clock in the morning till five in the afternoon.—God save the King."

After which the prosecutor read a long narrative, detailing the whole of the above charges, on which he commented at considerable length.

Major Paget was then called, and stated, that the prisoner, Captain Brown, on or about the 14th of May last, applied to him for leave to be absent from the next parade, which was granted him, on condition that he should return against the next parade day; but that instead of Captain Brown returning at that time to his duty, he had gone down to Cambridgeshire, and thereby incurred the displeasure of his Colonel. Several letters were then produced from Capt. Brown, particularly one from Cambridgeshire, by which it appeared that he threw himself on the clemency of his Colonel. The investigation of the first charge against Captain Brown here closed. The Court then adjourned till next day.

The next day, when the second charge against Captain Brown and Lieut. Zouche commenced, Lieutenant-Colonel Boydell was called in, who swore to his having, in company with Captain and Adjutant M'Donald, found several of the placards alluded to in the second charge, in the room of Capt. Brown, at the Garrick's Head, in the month of May last.—A Mr. Wilson, then, who was the principal evidence in the business, and by whom the whole of this matter was laid open, was called in, and stated, that on or about the 26th of May last, he was at the Garrick's Head, with Capt. Brown, when Lieut. Zouche came there, and proposed to Capt. Brown, that if he would be advised by him, that he would bring him through the piece, he (Capt. Brown) being at that time under arrest for being absent without leave. Accordingly, Lieut. Zouche, in the presence of the witness, drew up the placard, and its contents being approved of by the company, it was then sent to several printers in the neighbourhood of Covent-Garden to be printed; but they refused having any thing to do with it; till at last, a person in Rupert-street, Haymarket, executed it, and by whom 1,000 were printed. In the course of the following day the witness, accompanied by Lieut. Zouche, after procuring some printed copies, went to a Mr. Walters, who formerly belonged to the Royal East London Regiment of Militia; who, after perusing the placard, highly approved of Lieut. Zouche's adoption. They then went to the War-Office, where a copy was shewn to a clerk there, who was likewise of the same opinion; and from thence a printed copy was forwarded, as if in an official manner, directed to

Colonel

Colonel Sir John Eamer, having affixed on the cover the War-Office seal.

The landlord of the Garrick's Head was then next called in, who deposed, that several placards were in his house; and, particularly, some placed in the coffee-room there, fixed by the desire of Capt. Brown.

The next witness that was examined was Glendon, the printer, who deposed, that by order of Lieutenant Zouche, he printed 1000 copies, and was paid for the same by Capt. Brown. Here the evidence on behalf of the prosecution ended. The Court then adjourned till next morning to hear the defence. We are unacquainted with what defence these officers made: let it suffice that the Court afterwards pronounced the following sentence on them: That Capt. C. B. Brown and Lieut. Neville Zouche be cashiered, and that Lieut. Neville Zouche be rendered incapable of holding a situation in any military capacity whatsoever.

Under this head also we shall report in brief the proceedings of a General Court Martial, assembled on the 16th of August, at Chelsea College, to investigate the following charges, exhibited by Colonel Smith, of the Second Tower Hamlets Militia, against Lieut. Walter William Lewis, of the same regiment, viz.:—

First, For irregular and insubordinate conduct on or about the 14th of June, 1810, on the public parade at Deptford, where the regiment was assembled, in demanding a court martial in an insulting manner, taking off his sword, and refusing to resume it, though ordered so to do by Major Forsteen.

Second, For disobedience of a written order of the 14th of June, 1810, from Colonel Smith, in refusing to take back his sword, and to return to his duty.

Third, For appearing before the Colonel of his Regiment, on or about the 17th of June, 1810, at the Tower, in his regimentals without his sword, and for refusing, in the presence of Major-General Turner and other Officers, to obey the express commands of Colonel Smith, that he should return to his quarters and resume his duty.

Fourth, For breaking his arrest at Deptford, in Kent, on Saturday morning, the 23d of June last, he having been seen by Quarter-Master Brook, of the Second Regiment of Royal Tower Hamlets Militia, about noon on that day, in Cornhill, London, in coloured cloaths, and by Serjeant Creswell in Cannon-street, St. George's in the East, at a quarter before eleven o'clock on the evening of the said day, all such conduct being highly irregular and unofficer-like, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

Fifth Charge, added subsequently, For breaking his arrest on or about the 27th of June, 1810, aggravated by his violently resisting a party, sent by the order of his Colonel, to bring him to the head-quarters of the regiment at Deptford, on or about the 13th of July last, such conduct being highly irregular and unofficer-like, and to the prejudice of good order and military discipline.

The members of the Court Martial being sworn, the prosecutor opened his case, and proceeded to state his charges. Witnesses were then examined in their support, after which the Court adjourned to the 20th, when Lieutenant Lewis read his defence: it contained some unavailing reflections on his prosecutor, cutor, for, on a subsequent Sunday, the sentence of the Court was made known to the regiment and to the Prisoner, and was as follows:—"The Court having maturely weighed and considered all the evidence in support of the prosecution, as well as what was offered by the prisoner in his defence, are of opinion, that he is guilty of all the charges preferred against him, and do adjudge that Lieutenant W. Lewis be dismissed from his Majesty's service, and declared unworthy to serve his Majesty in any military capacity whatever." His Majesty was pleased to approve and confirm the above sentence.

The abstract of these trials, with that of Capt. Mason, in a subsequent part of our Magazine, are not simply given as articles of information, but with a view of bestowing some observations on the character of the parties concerned, and the tribunals to which the merits of their respective causes were submitted. True it is that we have for the above purpose, placed them under the head of "Disputes among Gentlemen on Points of Honour, &c." but must own, that in the conduct of certain individuals there appeared to us but little of the Gentleman, and less of the Soldier!

TURF OBITUARY.

ON Saturday, the 8th inst. died, at his house near Richmond, in Yorkshire, aged about 55 years, greatly lamented by his family and friends, Mr. THOMAS FIELD.—He was a kind and liberal parent, and an indulgent and excellent master: his death is much regretted by an extensive circle of gentlemen of the turf; by all of whom he was highly respected.

Mr. Field was a man possessed of a warm honest heart, sound judgment, and an excellent understanding; the esteem he was held in when living, and the universal good character he bore at the time of his death, are the best criterions due to departed worth.

Mr. Field was born at Melbourn, near Pocklington, Yorkshire, and brought up in the late Mr. Wentworth stables:—he was many years one of the leading jockies in the North, and his riding the following races over the York Course, besides several others, must ever be remembered by sportsmen.—These were—Mr. Peirse's Rosamond, against St. George, Huby, Cayenne, and Overton, 1794:—Mr. Garforth's Brilliant, against Bennington and Beningbrough, in 1795:—Sir H. T. Vane's Hambletonian, against Beningbrough, Trimbush, and Brilliant, in 1797:—Hambletonian, against Dïon, and Timothy, in 1800:—And the next day, Cockfighter, (against Constantia, &c.) who bolted at Middlethorpe Corner, when going off with the race, and lost about 300 yards; after which, it was allowed that Mr. Field displayed great judgment and coolness, in bringing up his horse to his antagonists, almost, as it were, inch by inch, which won him the race, though with some difficulty, but to the great satisfaction of the sporting gentlemen present.—Mr. Field, during his life, had been employed as rider or trainer (amongst many other highly respectable characters) to the following gentlemen, viz.:—the late Sir L. Dundas, Bart.; Sir W. Vavasour, Bart.; Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Bart.; Sir John Webb, Bart.; Messrs. Wentworth, Cornforth, Wetherell, &c.; also to the present

present Lord Dundas; Sir H. T. Vane, Bart.; Sir John Lawson, Bart.; Messrs. Baker, Garforth, Brandling, Shafto, W. Fletcher, W. Walker, &c.; and for the last twenty years, was allowed to be one of the most skilful and best trainers of race-horses in England.

MILITARY OFFICERS PROHIBITED SPORTING.

AS the gentlemen of the Army may not be fully aware of the severity of the prohibition against Officers killing game without permission of the Lord of the Manor, the following extract of the clause on that subject may not be deemed uninteresting:—

"If any Officer, without leave of the Lord of the Manor, under his hand and seal first had, take, kill, or destroy any hare, coney, partridge, pigeon, or any other sort of fowls, poultry, or fish, or his Majesty's game, within the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, every such Officer so offending, shall, for every such offence, forfeit the sum of 5l. upon complaint thereof being made before a Justice of Peace, by one or more creditable witness, which said sum shall be distributed among the poor of the place, where the offence shall be committed; and any officer commanding upon the place where the offence shall be committed by any soldier under his command, shall forfeit the sum of 20s. to be distributed in like manner as aforesaid; and if upon conviction such Officer shall refuse or neglect, and not within two days pay the said respective penalties, such Officer so refusing or neglecting, shall forfeit his commission."

ESCAPE OF A TIGER.

ON Sunday, September the 2d, about eleven o'clock, Mr. Wombwell, proprietor of the Menagerie in Piccadilly, began to send off his wild beasts for exhibition at Bartholomew Fair.—Among them was a fine Bengal Royal Tiger. It had been scarcely placed in the caravan, when the horse that drew it took fright, and ran at full speed towards the Haymarket, when the caravan was upset. The den in which the tiger was confined, was thrown out by the violence of the shock, and broken to pieces. The animal, of course, was left at liberty; but he evinced no sign of terror or alarm, although he produced both in every beholder. He walked up Piccadilly in a majestic style, until he came opposite a new house, where he laid himself down upon a heap of gravel. Here his keepers, who followed him, made an attempt to secure him by throwing a rope round his neck. This irritated him. The infuriated animal flew at one of them, whom he bit severely in the left arm, and aimed so close at his neck, as to scratch his throat. Then leaving his prey he leaped down into the area, and took refuge in one of the cellars in the rear of the house. In this situation the keepers having discovered him, they planted a den with the entrance of it close to the door of the cellar, from which he was with difficulty, and after much provocation, driven into it, and the door being closed upon him, he was secured. It was near four o'clock on Monday morning before this was effected. The man whom he bit was taken to St. George's Hospital, where hopes are entertained that it will not be necessary that his arm should be amputated.

DARING

DARING PRACTICES OF POACHERS.

NIGHT-Hunters or poachers of every kind, have, of late years, grown to be a very numerous body, and from their improved methods of catching the game, and the ease with which they can dispose of it, it is in several places in a great measure destroyed: but, what most of all is an alarming consideration, a practice prevails in different parts of the kingdom, for persons to assemble together in the night, in companies, armed with fire-arms, and other offensive weapons, when they proceed, not only to destroy the game with nets, snares, and dogs, but frequently to commit other offences, as well to the detriment of individuals, as in direct violation of the public quiet. Though many of these are well known, yet they have the effrontery to denounce vengeance against every one who shall attempt to restrain them. Nay, the farmers hold them in such utter dread, that so far from lodging any informations against them, they are even afraid to disturb a single snare, with which their fields may at any time happen to be surrounded.

Of the many offenders who have been charged with destroying, or attempting to destroy the game, they may be generally comprised under the following descriptions:—as men of profligate and abandoned characters—or without any visible means of obtaining a livelihood—or having been guilty of notorious offences—or justly suspected of such; and these suspicions are too often confirmed by subsequent misconduct, and it is very remarkable, that they are seldom or ever reclaimed; nay, such is their infatuation, that they will frequently wander to a great distance, the distance of many miles from their respective homes, where they can ha e a more convenient opportunity of succeeding in their nightly excursions.

Many of those who are expert in destroying hares and partridges, are not less so in robbing fish-ponds and rabbit warrens; guns, snares, and nets, for these several purposes, are commonly found in the possession of the same persons; and it is usual with them to take the whole stock of a pigeon house, by fixing nets over the openings of these houses, and forcing the birds into them. It was not long ago that a large quantity of pigeons, poultry, and other things, were carried of in one night, from different places in the same village; and two horses which were supposed to have been loaded with these articles, were taken from thence, and turned adrift near the town of Hertford.

There is a device, which is now very much practised, for destroying fish, particularly trouts in rivulets and brooks, by parties going in the night with blazing torches, which give them an opportunity of using spears and nets, so that they can easily secure most of the fish which come in their way. There is reason to believe, that by this contrivance no private fish-pond can be well secured against them. Pheasants also become an easy prey to poachers.

It may seem perhaps to be a ridiculous assertion, but the fact is indisputable, that there now actually exists in several places, an association of poachers and the abettors of them, who are ready to advance money for the purpose of paying penalties, or otherwise assisting any of their suffering brethren.

A man was some time ago convicted of setting snares in the night; he he had a wife and eight children, who were all miserable in the extreme; the whole furniture of the hovel in which they lived, amounted not to the value of ten shillings; yet this man, upon application to his associates, very speedily procured the penal sum in which he had been convicted.

At the spring assizes last held at Exeter, it appeared that a subscription was entered into by a great number of persons, to maintain in prison, and to defend on their trials, two men who were committed and indicted for shooting at a servant belonging to the Earl of Fortescue. This servant had been sent out with others to apprehend the two men and their company, when setting and using snares in the night not far from his lordship's house.

It is to be lamented that the price of game is now arrived to such an height, as to be a certain inducement for indigent persons to sacrifice their health, their reputation, and their liberty, in procuring it: Yet when, by the humanity of our laws, such ample provision is made for the maintenance of the poor of this kingdom, beyond that of any other in the known world, that every man who is incapable of work through age, infirmity, or otherwise, hath a right to support from his opulent neighbours, no possible excuse can be admitted in palliation of the guilt of these offenders.

RURAL SPORTS AT PLAISTOW, ESSEX.

Arthur Simms sworn, and examined by Mr. Gurney.

Q. What trade are you, Mr. Simms? A. I am a gardener.

Q. Do you live at Plaistow? A. I do; I was constable of the parish last year.

Q. Were you there on Whit-Monday, 1809? A. Yes.

Q. Were there a great many people there? A. Yes, there was a great number of persons.

Q. How many do you suppose? A. Some hundreds.

Q. Were they very quiet? A. No, they were very disorderly and noisy at times.

Q. Did the mob produce any other effect by their presence there? A. The people whose business led them along the road, were unable to get by: I saw horses and chaises stopt, and not suffered to pass.

Q. Did you observe any thing else? A. I saw a great number of the crowd scrambling for money under the horses feet: people could not carry on their business, for I saw several who were obliged to go round by another road with their cattle and things.

Q. Were you there again in the evening? A. Yes, I went there towards the evening.

Q. What did you observe particularly? A. Some of the mob were very drunk.

Q. Do you recollect seeing a flag suspended from one of the public-house windows? A. No, I did not see that.

Q. Did you hear any music? A. There were fifes and drums playing.

Q. Were there any asses racing? A. Several attempts were made to run the asses, but were preventedby the constables, who interfered.

Q. Did you see Archer there? A. I did.

Q. What particular notice did you take of him? A. He was standing in a cart, drest with ribbons, and making a great noise; ridiculing every person that passed, and exciting a mob round them.

Q. What was done with him? A. The peace-officers took him into custody.

Q. What other of the defendants did you see there? A. I saw Cochran there, young Grewar there, and Birch there; I saw Birch, however, earlier in the afternoon:—young young Grewar had a parcel of clothes on one arm, and Cochran was with him: the chief constable went to them, and requested them not to create a riot.

Q. What answer did they make? A. I cannot say exactly what answer they gave; they said it was the King's highway, and they would do as they pleased.

Q. Did they do any thing in consequence of this declaration? A. They started some boys to run; I stopped the boys: then Birch said, I'll run somebody for a bottle of wine, and let's see who dare stop me: Cochran also said, I'll run, and let me see who dare stop me. One of them started with Birch, and Cochran threw his hat off as they started.

Q. What passed then? A. Three or four constables got across the road, on which they were running, to prevent them: Cochran, who was also running at this time, ran against one of the officers.

Q. That is true, is it? A. It is.

Q. What did Cochran do then? A. He called the constables blackguards, and used a great deal of foul and vulgar abuse.

Q. Had the constable and you, your short, or your long staves? A. We had our long constables' staves.

Q. What did young Grewar then do? He came out and gave notice, that they should have no more sport till after dinner. Soon after dinner they came up, and attempted to start their donkies.

Q. What class of people were these? A. Three parts of the people were strangers of the lowest class, almost all Irish; and consisted of labourers, and jack-ass-drivers; they were of the very lowest description.

Q. What did Cochran do then? A. Cochran got his ass out, and said he would run it wherever he pleased. His man got on it, and attempted to ride.

Q. Do you know this man's name? A. I do not.

Q. What was done then? A. I stopped the donkey, and made the man get off: Cochran came up, and said we were a parcel of damned rascals, and had no business with his man.

Q. Were there many people then about you? A. There was a great number of their party.

Q. Did you see Mackenzie and Vincent? A. I did not: the crowd were very abusive, following us, and mobbing us.

Q. What else did you see? A. There was a donkey brought forward by Archer, and Bowman got upon the donkey, but we stopt him, and made him get off; he was then very abusive, and noisy; he kept jawing us, and making a piece of work all the time.

Q. Did any thing further pass? A. They attempted to start some more asses from the Greyhound public-house, which was about 100 yards lower down, and out of the mob.

Q. When did the mob begin to collect? A. They began in the middle of the day, and continued till past ten o'clock in the evening.

Q. What o'clock was it when they were completely dispersed? A. It was past twelve o'clock before we got the public-houses clear of them.

Q. Were there any of them taken into custody? A. Between seven and eight o'clock we put two of them into the watch-house, Archer and Bowman. Soon after this, the mob dispersed, and they went home quietly.

Q. Did you see Higginson there?

A. In

A. In the course of the forenoon he was riding about on his horse. I don't know that he was one of the mob. I saw him there when we were putting the men in the watch-house; he was riding at the officers, and he appeared as if he was coming to rescue the men from us.

Cross-examined by Mr. Adolphus.

Q. Grewar, the elder, is a feeble old man, near eighty years of age? A. I believe he is.

Q. You first saw this collection of people before dinner? A. Yes, I did.

Q. This was about eleven or twelve o'clock? A. It was.

Q. There was no donkey-racing then? A. No.

Q. Did you not beat any of the party? A. No, I did not.

Q. Are you quite sure that you and the other constables did not strike the boys with your staves? A. No, upon my soul, I did not, nor any one with me; I never saw a boy or man struck by any body.

Q. Did you not strike somebody when you were putting the men in the watch-house? A. No, I did not; we had great difficulty in protecting ourselves from the violence; we were obliged to keep in the middle of the way.

Q. Did you see the women running? A. Yes, I did; they ran against me: they placed themselves in the same ways the others did when they were going to run.

Q. Did you not strike the women? A. I did not.

Q. Did not somebody strike the women? A. There was a man of the name of Stevenson, a constable, of Woodford, who had some altercation with one of the women, but whether there was any blow struck I cannot say.

Q. He was rather moon-struck? A. I cannot say.

Q. Will you say he never struck one of the women? A. No, I will not; he only prevented the women running; they were never struck.

Q. Are you sure they were never struck? A. No, not by the constables.

Q. Mr. Cochran resides at Plaistow? A. He does.

Q. When he brought out his jack-ass, and his man got on, was he not violently pushed, and his man knocked off the donkey? A. No; there was a donkey coming out, and we took hold of him, and made the man quietly get off.

Q. How long have you known this village? A. About thirty-two years.

Q. Did you never know of donkey-racing before these three years past? A. I never knew of any thing: there has been one or two, perhaps, on Easter-Monday.

Re-examined by Mr. Gurney.

Q. In former times the rural sports were attended by the inhabitants of the village only? A. That was the case; in 1808, the crowd consisted of three-fourths strangers.

William Plumb, examined by Mr. Bolland.

Q. What are you, Sir? A. I am High Constable of the parish of Plaistow.

Q. What description of people were they that attended Plaistow fair on Whit-Monday, 1809? A. They were almost all Irish people.

Q. Did you see Grewar there, and what was he doing? A. I saw him with a shift upon his arm. I saw Cochran also. I recommended them to go away, and not breed a disturbance. Cochran said he was upon the King's highway, and nobody had a right to disturb him.

Q. What

Q. What did you see afterwards? A. I saw Grewar shaking a shift out of a window; there were several others also with him.

Q. Did you see Cochran doing any thing afterwards? A. Cochran abused the constables, and said they were a set of damned rascals.

Q. You witnessed the same things that the last witness spoke of? A. Exactly so.

Q. Did you hear Timothy West, the butcher, say any thing? A. I heard him say to Mr. Adams, when he was riding in his chaise, "Damn his eyes, turn him over, and break his bloody neck."

Q. Did Mr. Adams say any thing to this? A. No, he did not; he went quietly away.

Q. Did you know a man of the name of Archer? A. Yes, I do: I saw him in the crowd, standing in a cart. He had a mask on.

Q. Was he not dressed in a cocked hat? A. He was: he had a great cocked hat on, dressed in ribbons, and riding about the place in his cart.

Q. Was he very quiet? A. He was exceedingly noisy and hallooing.

Q. You say the greater part of the people were Irish? A. They were.

Q. Cochran said to the constables, you are a parcel of damned rascals? A. He did so.

Thomas Reynolds sworn, and examined by Mr. Garrow.

Q. You are a constable? A. Yes, I am.

Q. Were you at Plaistow on Whit-Monday, 1809? A. I was; I went there to keep the peace.

Q. Were the people very noisy? A. They were very quiet till they began the races, and then the noise commenced; they were pushing and hawling every body about.

Q. Was the road stopped up? A. It was, and nobody could pass.

Q. Did you see Higginson? A. I did; his horse trod on my toes, whilst I was assisting to take Archer to the watch-house. He appeared as if he wished to prevent us taking him.

Q. Did you see Timothy West? A. Yes, I did: he was the worst of the whole.

Cross-examined by Mr. Common Serjeant.

Q. Archer was dressed in ribbons, was he not? A. He was.

Q. And making himself very ridiculous? A. He was.

Q. And for that you took him to the watch-house? (No answer.)

Mr. Garrow.—"I do not think this man was taken to the watch-house because he was fooling."

Stephen Reynolds sworn, and examined by Mr. Gurney.

Q. You are a peace-officer? A. I am.

Q. Were you at Plaistow on Whit-Monday, 1809? A. I was there a considerable part of the day.

Q. How many people were there? A. About four or five hundred.

Q. Did you see Thomas Bowman there? A. He was there with his donkey.

Q. Did you see Archer there, and what was he doing? A. I saw him taking off his hat, with ribbons on it, and heard him make a hallooing and laughing. He said to the crowd, follow me, follow me. Seeing him very active, I went up, and told him that I was a peace-officer; laid hold of him by the collar, and desired him to desist from making his noise. He replied, that what he was doing did not concern me.

Q. You

Q. You took him to the watch-house? A. I did.

Q. What passed there? A. Whilst I was putting Archer into the watch-house, Bowman came down to rescue him, when he also was put into the watch-house.

Q. Till what hour was the noise kept up? A. From twelve in the day till eleven at night.

Cross-examined by Mr. Serjeant Best.

DOCTRINE OF CHANCES.

A Gamester has lately published at Paris, a volume of 230 pages, in large octavo, with 1024 new and consecutive series of points, for the use of punters. To obtain these numbers, the author procured 60,000 chances, or 1,560,000 throws, equivalent to four years of uninterrupted play. On this mass of throws, he experimented and recorded turns up, of all the chances that happened, from nothing to a series of ten. Of these he has instituted a comparison, estimating such numbers as ought, from calculation, to turn up. He has added no less than 1600 sets of chances, such as were produced at hazard, quite new, and in a regular series. By these he justifies the various methods which he describes in his work—for playing at one and thirty, and betting on the chances of the game.

MAJOR WHEATLEY'S ACCOUNT

OF THE AFFAIR BETWEEN

MR. HUBBARD & MR. WREATHER.

Falconer's Hall, Sept. 14, 1810.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

I Have lately seen your Sporting Magazine for the month of July last, in which is contained an erroneous statement of an intended duel, between Mr. Hubbard, of Southampton-buildings, Lincoln's-Inn, and Mr. Wreather, of Gray's-Inn. If you had known Mr. Hubbard, bard, I do not think you would have inserted any thing about bag-foxes, sporting colonels, and police hounds. Be assured, this gentleman is too respectable to be hunted down by such a pack, or such a sportsman. I have no doubt but what the account you have given of this affair was taken from some newspaper; but, as I was present when the dispute happened, and actually attended Mr. Hubbard, as his friend, to the ground, I trust you will excuse my anxiety in wishing to see it correctly stated.

In the first place, Mr. Hubbard is not an attorney, as you have stated, but is a gentleman regularly bred to the bar, and has for many years been in considerable practice as a chamber counsel and conveyancer: and in the next place, I do assure you, that neither Mr. Hubbard nor Mr. Wreather were prevented by the interference of Colonel Thornton, or any Bow-street officer, from attending at the time and place appointed. The place was Primrose-Hill, and the hour eight o'clock in the morning. I called at Mr. Hubbard's house at seven o'clock on that morning, we immediately set off together for Primrose-Hill, where we arrived without any interruption, five minutes before eight: we waited there till near nine o'clock, but neither Mr. Wreather or his friend appeared.

On our return to town, about ten o'clock, I was informed that Mr. Wreather was in the custody of a Bow-street officer, and that there was a warrant also out against Mr. Hubbard. I instantly called on Mr. Wreather, and found him in the custody of Lavender, the Bow-street officer; on my inquiring what time he was taken, to my great astonishment, Lavender said he did not take him, or go after him, till twenty minutes after nine o'clock, the truth of which was admitted by Mr. Wreather himself; consequently he was not prevented from being on Primrose-hill at eight; but, on the contrary, he was found by the officer, very quietly and peaceably disposed, in his chambers, full two hours after he ought to have left home, if he ever meant to have kept his appointment with Mr. Hubbard.—I remain, Sir, your obedient servant,

J. H. Wheatley.

ARGUMENTS IN DEFENCE OF HUNTING.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

As a lover of my country, as well as a sportsman, I must observe, with the deepest concern, the antipathy towards hunting diffusing itself through many of the best hunts in the kingdom; and have waited with considerable patience, in the hope of seeing a champion in its behalf, through your publication. I offer my trifling observations more with the impression of being joined in the pursuit, than as its protector. My pen I feel too humble; but could I warm some sportsman to take up the matter, who might do it more justice than myself, my gratification would be complete. The field for argument is great; much may be said for its use, as well as ornament. I despair warming the cold blood of those with my pen, who cannot feel a glow from the sport, which even animates the clod.

I do conceive that whatever is worth cultivating, is in its degree honourable to the individual who strives to complete his aim, in getting ting it as near perfection as the limits of human genius will admit, and praise-worthy in the country or body of people encouraging that individual; and if the pursuit may be useful, as well as honourable, it is the duty of every well-wisher to society, if he does not like it, at least not to crush it. Every good will have its trifling ill to some or other; but if the good outbalances the ill, will any argue that the whole should be done away? We suffer in the lesser for the material good in every pursuit, whether of pleasure or the concerns of life. Every nation has its amusements peculiar to the disposition of its people, and which policy itself has ever refrained from striking a blow either on its consequence, or its resources.

Hunting, as it is followed in this country, is the only amusement that may be said to fill up the vacuum occasioned by the non-continuance of tilts and tournaments. These diversions were as much for use as ornament. Their use consisted as much in the splendour of their appearance, as for exciting a thirst for glory, and keeping alive that noble spirit of enterprise, much to the interest of the community at large. All nations and people are warmed by the pleasures of the chase, and have strived for its excellency, but to us remains the honour of having got it nearest to perfection; and its having, consequently, become a national honour, its ornament may not be doubted. Let us now endeavour to point out a few of its uses. In the first place, it is of the greatest consideration when we reflect on its consequence as to the breed of horses among us. We have had enough done through importations, to stain the blood of this useful animal, without having recourse to the only means which must ruin it quite. Stop hunting, and we do away the most useful sort of horse we can boast. What, then, would become of that fine mixture of breed known by the name of the hunter? of what use would it be to keep up the breed, or who could keep it up? What, then, would be substituted for our post-horse? Those very persons, now so warm upon the subject of annulling hunting, would be as little pleased with sitting five or six hours on the road, instead of half the time. It is a well-known fact, that old hunters make the best post-horses in the world; they answer the end of the post-master better when turned out of the hunting stable, than if put to road work when young; they are not only seasoned to work, but their price is better seasoned to the pocket of the buyer. What post-master but would prefer even the old racer for posting, to the young raw horse, however well-bred. What is blood to him? In the old horse, he has as little chance as trouble; in the young one both, and much money at stake to boot. Persons breeding a sort of horse for use, as a hunter, are only paid for it by sometimes selling a few at enormous prices, from their promise, &c. when young. Few breeders would be paid if they were to sell their whole stock at 40l. or 50l. one with another, at four years old, and few hunters begin to promise before that age, and then they may not be brought into work till two years longer. Now who can afford to breed or buy at this rate, but for hunting? It is well known that racers and cart colts are the best for the breeder, as they may be brought into work early, and quickly make a return for their costs.

 If

If a farmer or landholder, in breeding six or eight hunters, sometimes gets four or five hundred guineas for a promising young horse, to what use can he put his land to answer better his end, and at the same time help to pay for the rest? A horse of this description remains through a variety of hands in his work five, six, or seven years, which so reduces the price, that he then becomes a servant of the public, and through this channel is the boast of this country, as to its posting, kept up. To what use is the hunter to be consigned, if the end for which he is bred be ruined? The gentlemen of the whip, and other like clubs, would certainly turn out many to the public; but every man, acquainted with the animal, must be aware how little he is able to continue on the road after being its slave, and ruined by it. Few, or none, can understand the treatment of horses so well as those persons about hunters; the care of them is much better studied; and, after rattling about the streets of London, and the hard dry roads in summer, (the time a hunter is taking his rest) I believe their feet to be in such a bad state, that even the hackneyman would care little about his future earning. Our cavalry must also suffer, and in short, this breed of horse must be ruined and done away with: we should again see the plodding nag-horse brought into use, to the great comfort of slow riders, and old women. This is one end those careful people would gain by putting an end to a sport, enjoyed and upheld for ages; and how sadly ignorant must have been our forefathers, to encourage a pursuit so injurious to mankind in general! how unwise to risk breaking necks, back, &c. when so easily put a stop to, by having recourse to so simple and good-natured an expedient as bringing it into a court of justice, which, by informing one person of an error, has made a gap for all choosing a short way round to be in at the death.

Another point leads me inclined to look upon hunting in a favourable light. I do not believe that sportsmen ought to be considered as more depraved than any other class of persons, but I believe few spend money so free and easy. Their hearts are as open as their purses. Having had but little care in getting their money, so they (philosophers like) care as little about the going of it.—Whether they live in club, or rent a hunting-box, a profusion must attend them; and their train of attendants learn all the little elegancies so beneficial to the floating capital of the master; but all this is of the greatest consequence to the neighbourhood they live in; and can it be supposed if we stop this one evil, which leads them to waste, that another may not be found probably worse? If they possess money, and you stop one channel, through which it might glide down with some degree of steadiness, they may plunge themselves headlong into an open sea of ruin, and they are lost without even a plank to save themselves on. If they fly to the turf, it only enriches those still without skill to employ it to a better purpose; or they fly to the dice, which only fits them to be a disgrace to society, as well as a dupe to folly. Whilst they have money, pleasure is the bent; then the more that money is distributed among the needy, the more should that pursuit be encouraged which leads to that effect. A town, or village, situated amidst a hunt, and possessing possessing little else at certain times, either to make them gay or rich, has a right to contemn the man of power, who barely considers a broken hedge, a voice in a morning, or riding over his land at a season when fit for nothing else, as a fit reason for driving away a set of people who are the very supporters of his neighbourhood; and, as the greatest man in power is the greatest man in the place, he is considered as a king amidst his surrounding people, and the more he studies his neighbours' welfare, the more he is deserving their esteem. In many neighbourhoods the alarm has spread, and it is viewed as destruction to many. Hunting is a link which may be said to bind much and many; what pursuit can be found to lead men even to natural exercise, through the dull dreary months of a long winter? It keeps society together. Gentlemen and neighbours meet, and from one pursuit an association of ideas must be the consequence. The exercise is manly, and invigorating to body and mind. In the young it excites competition and boldness, and in the aged, exercise and health. Courage is as necessary after a pack of hounds as before an enemy, for in my remarks I have never met with a coward who could ride up to hounds, and I believe it is general. To ride to the cover side and see the fox found, is to the aged sportsman a source of exquisite delight, and keeps his wind active. He dwells on the sight and its joys by day, and enjoys his evening in hearing how the victim was ended; and the feats of man and horse call back his mind to the time when, probably, he rode over the same track; descants on the fashion of hunting since his time; and, in short, still prides himself with the cherishing thought, that few have been more the true thing than himself. It may be said, so would any other pursuit or pleasure have the same impression on the mind of its votary—granted; then may not this pursuit find as good commendation as any other, since even the aged can trace back his time with delight, nor dwell on an action led into through his ardour, with a pang for having either ill-spent his time, or done an injury to a fellow-creature? Nay, I believe, it cannot be proved that injury can be sustained. I observe in a late trial, one shilling damages given, which proves to me it was only a wish for power that could induce the person to lay the action. He asked for nominal damages, and a shilling was given. Did a shilling pay so much damage? Could the gentleman be satisfied with only proving to the world that his power, in this respect, is not to be disputed?

As to the damage committed by sportsmen, I should be happy to convince myself in what it consists. Is it riding over land? I think not; for I observe farmers following the sport are no less careful over others than their own, and few but will own it cannot do an injury unless the roots be literally torn up. I have seen a piece of wheat trodden, to appearance, to pieces; but, at the time of harvest, it was in no worse state than the rest. As for breaking down fences, the season does more than the sport. I should be happy to see the injury discussed, that we may learn why this rage exists. I think sportsmen a set of people "more sinned against than sinning," at least, as they are treated at present.—Your's, &c.

A DESCRIPTION AND A QUESTION.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

YOU are now addressed by a new correspondent, one very little accustomed to writing, or any of the complimentary modes of salutation, although no little pains have been taken in his breeding. I will, therefore, comprise all I have to say in a short DESCRIPTION and a QUESTION.

There is a being very well known in this kingdom, on whom so much of its prosperity depends, that without his constant services the business of life would, in a great measure, stand still, and mankind be reduced to difficulties of which we have no conception. Without the active aid of this being, almost the whole of our internal commerce would be at a stand; the greater part of our manufactures would be interrupted; conveyances between one manufacturing town and another would, in most cases, be attended with great difficulty; and correspondence, whether literary or mercantile, whether on affairs of a public or domestic nature, would be attended with the greatest delay and inconvenience.

Without this same being, also, the recovery of the sick would be rendered extremely difficult; and the preservation of health in those who enjoy that blessing, would in many cases be impossible, he having it in his power to contribute to the best of all remedies and the best of all preventatives, exercise; which few, particularly in this overgrown metropolis, could take without his aid. But besides the extensive usefulness of this being, which I may sum up in one short position, namely, that he is the most useful of all created beings, and fulfils the end of his creation with a punctuality that might make the best of us blush—I say, Sir, besides all this, he is so liberal a contributor to the pleasures of the opulent and gay, that they, above all others, would be reduced to the utmost distress without his services. It may be said, indeed, that he administers a little too much to their pride and state; but on the other hand, it is equally true that, without him, their lives would pass in a state of hopeless inactivity, their assemblies and routs would want a considerable part of their éclat, and their association with one another, whether in town or country, would be so difficult as in most cases to be totally impracticable.

It may be thought panegyric enough that the being I am describing is so generously instrumental both to business and pleasure; but, as during a war, services of another kind are expected from the healthful and the brave, I may add that his merit is no less conspicuous in the great contest we are now obliged to maintain against an implacable enemy. In the army, it is well known that his services are of the first importance; and, besides shedding his best blood in battle, he is often instrumental in turning the fate of the day, or in favouring a retreat, if a retreat is necessary, and must be effected with speed; hence you will find his name in all our public offices where the business of the war is carried on: but his services are, if I mistake not, more particularly and indispensibly necessary in the ordnance branch.

Were it of importance to enhance his merit, I might add that our young men of fashion and spirit are, are, above all others, very highly indebted to him, not only for the services he renders to them in common with the rest of mankind, but because he affords what they often very much want, a topic for conversation. I have sat for hours in the company of many of these gentlemen, and never heard a word from them but what related directly or indirectly to the birth, character, and behaviour of the being whom I am attempting to describe. And such is their gratitude (whether judicious or not, I cannot affirm) that some of them have spent their fortunes in studying the qualities of this being, and in determining how far his services will go.

As to these qualities, I might enlarge with great justice upon them—I might expatiate on the facility with which he learns to be useful, the alacrity with which he goes about his business, and speed with which he executes his commissions; I might speak of his temperance, his obedience, his patience, and many other virtues, which I am sorry to say are not always to be found in those who give themselves airs above him; but I do not wish to occupy more of your Magazine than may be convenient, and I therefore, after this DESCRIPTION, proceed to my QUESTION.

How comes it about, Sir, that this being, the most useful of all, should be of all others treated with a most unfeeling barbarity, and wanton cruelty, particularly in this metropolis, where his services are best understood, but where instances of the inhuman treatment he meets with are to be witnessed every day, or in some or other part of London, every hour? I am, Sir, with the feelings of a man, neither more nor less than

A HORSE.

RECENT CURE OF GRAPED HEELS IN A CART HORSE, AT WILSDON.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

MR. Lawrence, in the second volume of his treatise on horses, observes, that, "grapes upon the heels, of long standing and dry, are incurable, unless perhaps they could be eradicated either by knife or caustic, and the cure conducted with the horse living abroad." A remarkable cure of this kind, Mr. Editor, has been recently performed by a farrier at Wilsdon-Green, Middlesex. The subject was a grey cart gelding, of capital size and form; but, from the terribly diseased state of one of its hinder legs, was sold to the present owner for the small price of nine pounds. The leg was uncommonly swelled, from an inveterate case of grease, and covered with grapes, as they are styled in the language of the stable, which discharged an ichor so offensive and penetrating, that it was extremely disgusting, and, probably, not quite safe, to breathe the atmosphere of the unfortunate animal; in shoeing or dressing the leg of which, the smith required to have his nerves fortified with several glasses of the best cordial English. The farrier above-mentioned, succeeded in cutting away the fungous and graped flesh, afterwards freely using the actual cautery, by which the superfluous humour was discharged, and the parts consolidated and contracted within their natural dimensions. About ten days since, I saw the gelding upon Wilsdon-Green, apparently sound, and his leg of its proper size and shape.

The above miserable case of the horse, Sir, the consequence of cruel and and culpable neglect, has, too often, in the course of years, wounded my sensibility, and, in one or two instances, affected my interest. The rationale of the matter is as follows. A cure is by no means always to be expected from the above treatment, and the disappointments have been numerous, even after that most severe and agonising operation has been put in practice. In the mean time, the animal must exist in constant torments, with a leg, under the disease in question, that, with a humane man, the putting an instant end to the life and sufferings of the abused and tortured slave, can form no question.

A TRUE LOVER OF THE HORSE.

ON THE COMPARATIVE MERITS OF RIFLE GUNS.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

OBSERVING the occasional accounts of pigeon-shooting in your Magazine, I am led to conclude that the following, witnessed by myself, and known to many, may be acceptable, particularly as your Sporting Magazine embraces all feats of skill. To avoid encroachment on your limits, I will, instead of detailing my opinion as to the real utility of volunteers, confine myself to saying, that I am no advocate for the general extent of that service, not even if the majority were, as indeed I think it should be, cavalry and light infantry; the duties of which are by far the best, calculating on the possibility of employing volunteers against the enemy, and to the best advantage. With such ideas, I called accidentally, July 12th, at Montpelier Gardens, in Surrey, where a detachment of a volunteer rifle corps, called the Duke of Cumberland's sharp-shooters, was firing for prizes, and I was agreeably entertained by the science and steadiness which the men evinced during their shooting, in which they really excelled all the rifle corps in the line I had ever seen; and this I say, as an act of justice to the men, and of praise to the officers who have so trained them. Many of the marksmen, in the experiments they made, and in their remarks, displayed as much desire of perfection as real study of their weapons, which were free from finery, but appeared excellent; and most of them by the following makers: Smith, of Lisle-street; Howson, of Piccadilly; Forsyth and Co. of Piccadilly; and Riviere, of Oxford-street. The mistaken idea of the utility of a quarter turn (which is the kind of rifle the line uses) was here clearly confuted. There were some few rifles with quarter turns, which performed very ill at 150, 200, and 250 yards, though they did middling at 100; whereas the three-quarter and whole turns shot well and close at all distances, and seemed in general use with these men, whose opinion is far from useless. The prizes were two silver cups, one for the best marksman at the long distance (150 and 200 yards, firing from a rest), and the other for the most skilful shot from the shoulder, at 110 yards. The first was won by Corporal Porteus, (a saddler, in Warwick-street), who, of twelve shots fired, put eleven of these into the target, two of these bull's eyes: the target, thirty inches diameter. The other prize was gained by Mr. Random de Berenger, the adjutant of this corps. The target was a sheet of royal pasteboard, board, with a ten-inch bull's eye. He fired only six shots from the shoulder, at 110 yards, and hit every one—five in the bull's eye. This gentleman seemed to have an advantage over the rest; for, besides being an experienced shot, he used one of Forsyth's patent gun-locks, which, flintless, goes off by percussion. I had often seen this lock in injudicious hands, and my prejudice against it was very strong; but I think it only an act of justice to declare, that the skill exhibited by the adjutant, supported by his judicious explanations, which fully exposed that mismanagement alone could have produced the want of success I had witnessed, have completely removed my dislike; and he invited me to see him shoot since, when, in the presence of many of his corps, he fired sixteen shots, at 110 yards, without resting, hit the target every time; and, out of sixteen, he put eleven shots into the bull's eye, and then even seemed dissatisfied at his performance. Mr. Smith, the gunmaker, being present, asked him to try a rifle pistol, which was something out of order, and belonged to a stranger: (it is true it had a fourteen-inch barrel, and was curiously sighted; as also furnished with a pistol shoulder-but). After firing two shots low in the target, (also at 110 yards, and without a rest) he requested Mr. Smith would alter the sight to his direction; which done, to my great surprise, he fired four shots, at 110 yards, without a rest, and put them all into the bull's eye: he then left off, and offered to take odds that he would do the same again, but no one would take the wager. I observed several other marksmen as skilful, or nearly so; and I now confess my regret that more volunteers are not trained to this useful service; but more so, that the line cannot boast of equal skill; as a small number of men, equally well taught and armed, would be of the first utility in our present arduous conflict, particularly in the mountainous countries now the seat of war; and I hope that the gentleman alluded to will soon complete a singular gun, which he describes as his invention, and calls it a species of flying artillery, with which he seems confident to hit a man at 500 yards and upwards. On this subject nothing can be said at present; but this you may rely on, that I have stated facts as to what I witnessed; and I since understand that some of the targets have been seen at Messrs. Forsyth and Co.'s gun-makers, in Piccadilly.—I am, Sir,

An Old Soldier, and occasional Correspondent.

Aug. 29, 1810.

GENERAL COURT MARTIAL.

On Thursday, the 23d ult. a General Court-Martial assembled at Chelsea College, in order to investigate charges preferred by Richard Thorp, a private in the 2d Tower Hamlets Regiment of Militia, against Captain and Adjutant William Mason, belonging to the said Regiment of Militia. The Court met at ten o'clock, when the Hon. Charles Manners Sutton, the Judge-Advocate, read the charges, which were as follow: viz.

1st—Constantly defrauding of government, by charging the full bounty for recruits, who have only received a small part thereof, and then deserted with the same, to the injury of his Majesty's service.

2d—Misapplying and appropriating to his own private purposes, the money allowed by principals, and government, to substitutes and recruits, by providing them through the means of others, at reduced bounties, and putting the surplus (as well as part of the money due to the bringers) into his own pocket, when forbidden to enlist, to the injury of the country, the recruit, and the bringer.

3d.—Constantly ordering non-commissioned Officers and Privates to perform all kinds of work for him, and to go of messages, &c. &c. for which he gave them guards, and sometimes excused them from regimental parades for a certain time, to the injury of the regiment, and the prejudice of the service.

4th.—Cruelty and barbarity to Serjeant David Wood of the 1st company, John Clinton of the 4th company, and James Hinton of the light company, as well as numerous others, in billing them up in the store, guard-room, and place of parade—in the former place they had not room to lie down for nights together—drilling and forcing them on fatigue, even in handcuffs, as well as compelling them to mount their guards during their confinement, contrary to the articles and custom of war.

5th.—Violently striking with his cane, on or about the 15th of June 1807, John Reading, a private in the 2d company (when under arms), the head of which entered his cap about three inches, and could not be taken out, but with force. Likewise striking William Blunt, a private in the grenadier company, on or about the 24th of November 1809, as well as William Wright of the 3d company, on or about the 19th of January 1810, contrary to his Majesty's orders.

The above charges being then read, the members' names composing the General Court-Martial were called over; on which Colonel Stephen Claudius Hunter, of the West London Regiment of Militia, was appointed President.

The prosecutor (who was, during the whole of the day's proceedings, ably assisted by Mr. Barry, his counsel) addressed the honourable Court nearly as follows:

"Mr. President, and Gentlemen—Being a private soldier, as the prosecutor of charges against any military man, much more against my superior, and he a commissioned officer, I own that great difficulties arise in my mind, and none more than the fear that the army might entertain a mistaken notion of the case; and that unworthy men, if any such are in it, might (availing themselves of such a precedent) think themselves justified thereby to constitute a pretext for instituting accusations against those above them, and make this event their example for such a purpose. But I have hopes, that, much as such a circumstance is to be dreaded, yet there will the less danger be apprehended from it, when the satisfactory fact is considered, that however numerous that army is, yet, that the matters which I shall lay before you against Captain Mason, will be of that description that it is not likely any other Regiment of the Line, or of the Militia, will afford the like cause; and therefore that the laborious and irksome duty which I have undertaken will not become necessary any where else.

"If the detection of wrong, if the exposure of crime, if the publicity of it, and demanding justice of the offender, be difficulties to men of elevated rank and of ingenious talents, how much more arduous

arduous must those labours be to me, whom fortune has not favoured with her largesses, and whose mind has not to boast of those polished and improved acquisitions, which can enable men to contend with more than equal force, against even enlightened adversaries! But I have towers of strength to support me, and to stand my proxy for these deficiencies; I have indubitable proofs to establish the accusations which I make, and I have the enormity of them to protect me. Added to which, I have the strong shield of that upright and discerning Court of Inquiry which first heard my complaints, and then pronounced them worthy of your jurisdiction.

"Gentlemen, the nature of the charges against the officer accused may be altogether comprised in injustice, selfishness, and cruelty! They are arranged under five distinct heads, but may be classed under these denominations.

"These abuses I undertake to prove. I shall demonstrate them by evidence unequivocal and clear; I shall satisfy the mind of the Court, that, in the painful task of pronouncing the word GUILTY upon a man who bears the King's commission, and has ranked with gentlemen throughout his military life (if guilty they should deem him), that in such a verdict they will shew their monarch their zeal for his service; and their country, that its welfare is at their heart."

The Court then proceeded to examine witnesses, amongst whom were several privates belonging to the said regiment of militia; who uniformly stated, that they had, instead of receiving the full bounty allowed by government, viz. 10l. 10s. had only received 8l. 8s. Some of them had, it appeared, received also the marching guinea. In one particular testimony (which was that of a person of the name of Williamson), it was stated, that he had belonged to the 2d Tower Hamlets Regiment of Militia, and obtained his discharge by finding a substitute, named Chantiler, for whom he paid 31l. 10s. a receipt for the payment of which was produced before the Hon. Court, which had been given him by Serjeant Barker, belonging to the said regiment; and by whose testimony it was stated, that he paid the money to Captain and Adjutant Mason.

Chantiler, the private, was then called in, who swore that he was paid by Captain Mason only 9l.

The next evidence was that of the paymaster to the regiment, which occupied the attention of the Court the remainder of the day. After which the Court adjourned till next day.

FRIDAY.—The Court being assembled, proceeded to examine evidence in support of the charges.—John Clinton, of the 4th company, (mentioned in the 4th Charge) deposed, that in the month of January he was billed up in the store guard-room; and that during his confinement there, owing to the closeness of the place, he was frequently under the necessity of laying down, in which situation some of his fellow prisoners were obliged to walk over him; and that he was, during his confinement, in a state of extreme illness, notwithstanding which, his pillow was often either a pewter pot or a brick; and that to the best of his belief he was confined there by Captain Mason.

In respect to billing of soldiers, one of the Members of the Court made an observation, that it frequently quently was found necessary to bill them, for the express purpose of having the men at command.

On cross-examination of the witness, it was asked him if he had ever been tried by a Regimental Court-Martial for mutinous intentions? in answer to which he replied in the affirmative. Notwithstanding which, he had in consequence thereof never received any punishment for the alleged crime.

James Hinton, of the Light Company, (also stated in the fourth Charge) deposed, that he was likewise billed up in the store guard-room, hand-cuffed; and that he was obliged, by order of Serjeant-Major Baker, to do such work as he was requested; on which occasions, he had the handcuffs on one arm only; and that the reason for being so confined and hand-cuffed proceeded from his refusing to turn his jacket.

John Reading (mentioned in the last charge as being violently struck by the prisoner with his cane, on or about the 15th of June 1807, when under arms, the head of which entered his cap about three inches, and could not be taken out but by force) appeared in Court with the cap; but, owing to the following section in the Mutiny Act, the charge was waived; viz. "That no person shall be liable to be tried and punished for any offence which shall appear to have been committed more than three years before the issuing of the warrant for such trial; unless the person accused, by reason of his having absented himself, or of some manifest impediment, shall not have been amenable to justice within that period; in which case such person shall be liable to be tried at any time not exceeding two years."

In referring to the warrant, it appeared to be dated in the month of July last, on or about the 27th; consequently this charge was not entered upon.

The last evidence was that of Captain Millar, the paymaster, which created much investigation, owing to the great intricacy of his accounts; on which the Honourable Charles Manners Sutton commented at considerable length, as to the mode of their being kept. In one part of this investigation it appeared, that it is usual for the Adjutant to certify that the accounts are correct before he hands them over to the Paymaster; and it uniformly appeared, that out of about thirty recruits he had actually returned as having been paid each 10l. 10s. and which sum was charged in the War Office accounts, though he had in reality paid no such monies to the recruits, having generally obtained them for less sums, which has been already fully established by evidence.

The prisoner was then called on for his defence; but not being prepared, the Court adjourned till next day, in order to give him time to prepare it.

SATURDAY.—The Court having resumed its proceedings, the prisoner put in a written defence, which was read by the Judge Advocate-General, and was nearly to the following purport, viz.:—

"That he had been all his life bred in a military capacity, and therefore his attainments in literature were not of that kind which could enable him to give that effect to his appeal to their humanity and judgment which he could wish; but that he was persuaded the Court, from its liberality, would make allowances for his defects.

"He entertained no doubt of being able to justify himself in the mind of the Court, for he would shew shew that nothing but the most diabolical conspiracy could have devised such a collection of foul accusations against him.

"That previous to the period of those charges being exhibited against him, he passed twenty-five years of his life in the army, and had filled every rank therein subordinate to his present situation, (captain and adjutant of this militia regiment), during which time he had the honour of receiving the approbation of all his superiors, and no complaint of any description during that time was ever preferred against him till these accusations were produced.

"That the infamy and baseness of his prosecutor's character was such, that no person but a man of his description would ever have brought such charges forward. That he was a man who had been accused of felony, who had been tried at the Old Bailey, who had been guilty of perjury and of disloyalty, and whom he (Captain Mason) had screened from punishment; that therefore his conduct in bringing charges of this description against his friend was vile and ungrateful; that others were connected with him in this conspiracy—persons of much superior rank in life in every respect. But that out of all the charges which they and the prosecutor had roused up against him before a Court of Enquiry, only these five were sent for the consideration of a Court Martial, and yet, in preferring these charges, the prosecutor had no cause whatsoever to complain of the conduct of the prisoner towards him."

The prisoner then proceeded to enter more at large respecting the charges separately. With respect to the first, he argued that as there was a current account between the paymaster and himself, and that account making him a debtor to government, it ought not to be fairly brought against him.

On the second charge he admitted some part of the accusation; as he did on the third charge respecting employing a soldier of the name of Bent, doing some little work for him, but contended that it was altogether a malevolent attack; and he said, that with respect to the fourth and fifth charges, he never committed an act of cruelty himself, or injured actually a private in the regiment.

He concluded with imputing the prosecution altogether to private revenge.

He then proceeded to call several witnesses to character, and offered to put in a paper to shew that the whole was a conspiracy.

The Court, however, through the organ of the Judge Advocate-General, signified that it was quite inadmissible, unless it was a document which could be proved and given in evidence, which the prisoner could not do.

The Court adjourned till Monday morning at ten o'clock, to hear the prosecutor's reply.

Monday.—The Court-Martial re-assembled this morning, pursuant to adjournment, and at ten o'clock the prosecutor entered the Court, and his Counsel, Mr. Barry, handed in the reply. The prosecutor read it with considerable effect as follows:—

"Mr. President and Gentlemen, You have now heard the evidence on both sides, and the remaining part of the duty falling upon me is, to make those observations thereon in reply, and to give such answer to the speech of the accused, as may best illustrate the whole case, and demonstrate the assertion which I made

made in opening this prosecution, namely, that I would establish the truth of the accusations which I have made against Captain Mason 'by evidence unequivocal and clear;' and this, I am persuaded, has been done to your fullest conviction. By the testimony of Mr. Mark, of the War-office, and the levy accounts which he produced, you find a charge made by Captain Mason of twelve guineas for Michael Downs, who was enlisted on the 13th of December, 1809, and deserted on the 19th of the same month, and that consequently that sum never was paid to him by Captain Mason, for it cannot be presumed that the defendant would pay a man money that he was not entitled to, when he has withheld from others that which they were actually entitled to. So far then the accusation in the first charge is made evident, and stands uncontradicted by Capt. Mason.

"With respect to the second charge, you have it proved to its full extent; first, in the matter of Harrison, who paid Capt. Mason thirty guineas for his substitute—whereas that very substitute proved that all the money which he received from Capt. Mason was 9l.; the balance then of 22l. 10s. is the sum which he has appropriated to his own use, and the conversion of it is established, because the defendant has not shewn to what public purpose, for the use of the regiment, he applied it, which he would have done if he possessed the means. Then as to the remaining part of the second charge, namely, his providing recruits at "reduced bounties," he has himself admitted the fact, and the cases are numerous.

"In noticing the mode of justification which Capt. Mason adopts, with the view of meeting those two charges, it is seen, that he calls upon the paymaster to prove that it was his intention to make himself debtor to government for the surplus in his hands, and thereby exonerate himself from the imputation of defrauding the state or the individual. If even that were true, why was it not made known sooner? Why did Capt. Mason wait to communicate in confidence his sentiments to the paymaster till he found the thing detected, and that enquiry was about to be instituted? And here, Mr. President, and Gentlemen, I invoke you to cast your eyes on the levy accounts which are laid before you from the War-Office, and which are certified to be true by Captain Mason, and sworn to be the same by this very paymaster; when at the very time that Capt. Mason so certified them—he knew that Downs, the deserter, had not received the money charged to the public for him; neither had recruits, mentioned therein, received the bounty charged to the state for them—but the paymaster has delivered in papers recently made up between himself and the defendant, to throw a shield over the charge, and blindfold your eyes in this investigation; he has called those papers details of "mixed accounts," as matters between themselves; but what have their private affairs and accounts to do with the public? Has not the paymaster stated, that sums of money have been issued frequently from the War-Office, since these levy accounts were first sent in, and are not these levy accounts the documents whereon he the defendant, and he the paymaster, are eventually remunerated by the state? and do not those levy accounts contain the names of the deserter Downs, and and of the recruits for whom full bounty has been charged, when the defendant himself acknowledges that they never received the same? Then I again humbly put to your honourable Court, of what value is this death-bed repentance of the defendant, or these made-up accounts of the paymaster himself?—For my part I can consider it only as an effort to hoodwink your understanding, and divert your attention from the main object of your investigation. Can they undo the solemn vouchers which they have jointly sent in to government, or can they convince your minds that any understanding between themselves privately was a guarantee to the public for any wrong that either of them might commit? In my humble judgment, your discernment will not permit such a device to be practised upon your understanding. If, instead of the mysterious and confused kind of evidence given by this paymaster, and the production of those managed papers, made up for the purpose, the defendant or his paymaster had put in the military books of accounts, and shewn what has been done with the effects of deserters during the last thirteen years, (the 19th section of the articles of war requiring that such should be appropriated to the public account) it would have much more weight in your determination. That, however, has not been done; but a great deal has been said about what will be done, which is wholly foreign to the matter in question. It has been also stated by the paymaster, that the reason why the accounts between him and the defendant have been so long unbalanced is, because the War-Office was tardy in advancing money to him, and that it was not likely he should in seven years hence receive the monies due to him now. Although upon this occasion very little observation need be required from me upon that point, yet it is impossible to forbear remarking, that he is the last man upon earth who ought to make such an accusation against the department of the War-Office, after sending in accounts to that office certified to be true, which have turned out to be false, and which, on the certificate of Captain Mason, he himself swore to be true.

"As to the third charge, you have the whole of the testimony given by Bent and Adams, uncontradicted by any thing that has appeared, and I have no hesitation in saying you can feel no scruple in declaring it to be proved, if not altogether in the case of one, yet in that of the other witness called in support of it.

The fourth charge has been incontrovertibly established by the testimony of Serjeant David Wood, John Clinton, James Hinton, and George Cabatier; and I have a right to say aggravated much, not merely from the barbarous treatment which these men received, but by the mean pettyfogging subterfuge and artifice adopted to stifle scrutiny, and put an extinguisher on the evidence of those men.

"Gentlemen, I am now necessarily constrained to advert to the address which Captain Mason has thought fit to lay before you, because I think that the ingredients of which it is composed are of that nature, that I should derelict from the cause I have espoused, and do injustice to it and to myself, if I passed it unnoticed. That gentleman sets out with observing, that having lived a soldier's life, he has not to boast of "literary acquirements;"—there we are on a par;—and as he therefore looked forward to to your indulgences for his deficiencies, so do I.

"He then charges, 'That these accusations proceed from a conspiracy formed against him,' but my answer is, that if knowing of the transactions charged to Capt. Mason, and seeking for evidence to support them, be conspiracy, then am I guilty indeed; but if I am, it is guilty of conspiring to bring him and his conduct to justice. When the defendant speaks of conspiracy in me, he should look a little to himself; and when I retort that charge to him, I call to his recollection the conspiracy he formed to stifle the effects of the testimony of those witnesses, whom he and others induced to sign the paper which I have mentioned, and then it will appear that my conspiracy was to bring truth to light, whilst his conspiracy was to extinguish it.

"That the defendant should have risen from the humble situation of private soldier, to the rank which he now holds, is a matter of great self-gratulation to him, and he has a right to be proud of it. And that he has produced testimony of characters that deserves every mark of consideration, I freely acknowledge, and that this testimony was given by men of considerable importance in life. But where facts are proved, character, with all its import, can be of value only inasmuch as it may operate to soften the behests of the law. Whilst, however, Capt. Mason is so jealous of his character, and estimates it so highly, he ought not, without foundation, to be lavish in his reproaches of mine. I never was convicted before any tribunal in the world—I never committed perjury—I never was a disloyal man—I did, indeed, desert from the 2d regiment of Royal Tower Hamlets, because I had been grossly ill-treated, sought redress, and demanded courts martial, but in vain. I never did that act in the whole course of my life, that I am either ashamed or afraid to avow.—It is not by my character, whether good or bad, that Capt. Mason's conduct is investigated; even my character, were it infamous, is no justification of his wrong. I was no witness against him; has he falsified the testimony or impugned the character of one that was? But if I were the flagitious and base person whom he has described, and whose truth and loyalty have been so stained, why did he, an officer holding his Majesty's commission, 'screen me from punishment?' He cannot account for that, nor do I imagine any other person on earth can or will.

"Instead of filling his address with invective and unfounded reproaches against me, it would have been better to have furnished you with one document to defend himself; if, instead of abuse, he had introduced argument, founded upon facts, it would have been more creditable to him, and beneficial to the service and his cause. If he could have assigned any reason why he withheld from the poor recruit his indefeasible right, instead of purloining from him that which was his due, that would have been a more dignified as well as wholesome safeguard for himself, than all the obloquy, deserved or not, which he has poured forth against me. And here, for the last time, I must avail myself of the occasion, that his imputations against my fame are as false as they are malignant and foul.

"This cause, Mr. President and Gentlemen, is not mine; it is the cause of the King's service, of the humble private, of the inexperienced of recruit, and of the public at large. On your determination the eyes of all these are fixed; and they entertain no doubt that you will, as men of high honour, discharge the duty which your country has called upon you to perform with judgment and with justice.

"Be pleased to accept my profound thanks for the personal kindness I have experienced; to you I tender most humbly those thanks, with my gratitude to the Right Hon. and Learned Judge-Advocate, to whom the laborious task of regulating by rules of law your proceedings has devolved, and in whose hands it has been managed so wisely and so well." I have now done.

The Court was then cleared of strangers, and they proceeded to deliberate on the sentence.

The sentence of the Court on Captain Mason was promulgated to the officers of the corps at Deptford, by Major-General Turner, commanding the London brigade. Captain Mason was acquitted of the first, second, and third charges, and partially so of the fourth and fifth, but the Court directed him to be reprimanded for having struck Serjeant Wood and private William Wright, which reprimand was accordingly given by the Major-General.

PEDESTRIANISM.

A Gentleman of the name of Canning, a Volunteer Captain, of Hampshire, undertook, on the 12th instant, to travel sixty miles a day during five successive days, for two hundred guineas. He started on the turnpike road, four miles from Basingstoke, at four o'clock in the morning, and did his sixty miles with ease in fourteen hours. He finished his wonderful task two miles from Yeovil, in Somersetshire, at eleven o'clock, on Monday night, and he could probably have gone another day. He lost 26lb. in weight on the journey.

On Thursday, Sept. the 13th, a Mr. Graham undertook, for a wager of ten guineas, to go three times from under the dome of St. Paul's to the golden gallery, and down again, while a Mr. Grant ate 400 oysters. Graham accomplished his undertaking in thirty-eight minutes, and found Grant with thirty-eight oysters remaining.

On Wednesday, the 12th instant, a bet of 100 guineas was decided on the Ashchurch road, by Mr. Francis Martin, of Tewkesbury, who undertook to run half a mile in two minutes and a half; he completed the task apparently with ease, in two minutes and eight seconds. The bet at starting were two to one against him.

Captain Howe, a pedestrian, undertook on Tuesday, the 11th instant, for a wager of fifty guineas, to go two miles in twelve minutes, on a piece of good ground between Hounslow and Ashford. He failed in the attempt, and lost by forty seconds.

THE FOX UNKENNELED.

THIS is an Etching by Mr. Howit, and which requires no illustration. Wary reynard, listening the approach of the hounds, is sufficiently made out in the print, and indicates that the cunning gentleman intends shortly to be off!

FEAST OF WIT.

THEATRICALS Extra.—The young Governor, who so successfully enacted the Prisoner at Large, it is expected will shortly appear in a new character, namely, the Exile.

It is said at Newmarket, that all that is won upon the Heath never goes from it, which has been thus versified :—

Newmarket is a pleasant place,
And so are all the Trainers :
For tho' you oft may win a race,
They keep it as—Retainers.

An honest-looking fellow, anxious to shew his loyalty, or to enhance his finances, offering himself as a substitute for the militia to the Deputy-Lieutenants, acting for the division of Bathforum, on Wednesday, the 19th of September, at the Guildhall, in Bath, was, amongst other questions, asked if he was not an Irishman?—" No, your honour (said he, with a rich genuine brogue), I never was born in Ireland in my life, and I'm sure I never will be now."

A publican, who lives at the sign of the Three Partridges, a few miles from town, put up the following notice upon his sign-post on the morning of the 1st of September :—

" Ge'men from London mind your eye,
Nor at my birds take aim ;
For though, mayhap, you think they fly,
Believe me, they're dead game."

Some time ago the prisoners on being removed to Newgate, for trial, stopped at a public-house to drink ; a curious gentleman asked one what offence he had committed. " Only picking the pocket of a washerwoman of a pail of soap suds," was the answer he received.

The following is the transcript of a letter actually sent to the mistress of a boarding-school, near town, by the father of one of the female boarders :—" As I ad a good heddication myself, I am hintirely ashamed for to see wat manor that Lucey his bitt by the Buggs, and it is my desire for hur to sleep in the bedd that she alway do, and not for to sleep sum time in wun and then in annuther, for to feed all the buggs in the ouse, for I think that be not right ; neither shal she do it. So I remane, yures, &c."

Gleaning.—In order to caution persons against premature leasing in the fields of a parish in Oxfordshire, a notice, of which the following is a literal copy, signed by the principal farmers, has been stuck up in various parts of the village :—

" We woes names are signed and affixed do hearby give Notice to those that it may consarn trespassing in the way of Gleening till the field is clared will B shued a Cording to Law by Wee."

A Repartee.——A cordelier, preaching on the merits of St. Francis, exalted him, in his discourse, above all the other saints in the calendar. After exaggerating his merits, he exclaimed, " Where shall we place the seraphic father, St. Francis ? He is greater in dignity nity than all other saints. Shall we place him among the prophets? Oh! he is greater than the prophets. Shall we place him with the patriarchs? Oh! he is greater than the patriarchs."—In like manner he exalted him above the angels, archangels, cherubim, seraphim, virtues, thrones, dominions, and powers; and still he exclaimed, "Where then shall we place him? Where shall we place this holy saint?" A sailor in the church, tired with the discourse, stood up and said, "If you really don't know where to place him, you may place him in my seat; for I am going."

"You are an excellent packer," said a wine-bibber to a waiter; "I don't understand you, Sir," said the attendant. "Why, you have contrived to pack a quart of wine into a pint decanter."

A Frenchman being at Nottingham, and having to find out a sign, could not, with his utmost exertions, recollect the name further than, as he said, it was something belonging to a sheep. The fleece, the woolpack, the horns, &c. were then mentioned to him, but in vain; till, at length, starting from a short pause, he put this question, —"Vot do you Englishmen call de sheep's son?" "A lamb," was the reply. "By Gar," replied the Frenchman, "vous avez raison, you are right."

A provincial paper states, that the grains of wheat are so large this year they choak the little birds that attempt to swallow them!

A soldier's wife, who dropped down dead at Berwick, was opened by the faculty, to ascertain the cause of her death; their report was—"The effect of bad whiskey."

Naval Anecdote.—When the brave Admiral Kempenfelt, unhappily lost in the Royal George, was coming into port to have his ship paid off, a sailor eyed a gold-laced velvet waistcoat which his commodore wore, with great earnestness, and, in his best sea fashion, begged to know who made it? The Admiral perceiving his drift, gave him the necessary information, and Jack went ashore. He forthwith applied to the Admiral's tailor, who knowing the humours of his customers, went with him to buy the materials, and at last asked him what he would have the back made of? "Made of," said Jack, "the same as the front, to be sure." The tailor remonstrated, but in vain; so the waistcoat was made, and put on with an old greasy jacket over it. One day, in the High-street, the Admiral met his man in his curious dress, which occasioned him to laugh heartily; and this merry fit was not a little increased, when Jack, coming up to him, lifted up the hind part of his jacket, and shewing his gold-laced back, exclaimed:—"D—n me, old boy, no false colours! stem and stern alike, by G-d!"

One observed, that the rustic amusement of cudgel playing should be abolished, as it affected the security of the Crown.

A new stage, from Cheltenham to Oxford, is thus made known to the public under the auspicious, fashionable, and elegant appellation of the "Bang-up Diligence." How enchantingly amiable, delicate, and prime in the extreme, when a lady is asked by what conveyance, veyance she designs to travel, to hear the reply—"Oh, Sir, I have ordered my place in the Bang-up!"

SEVERAL strange fish have lately appeared on the coast. At Brighton, last week, the public crier gave notice, that there had been found under the rocks, about a mile to the East, a black spotted, patent lace whale.

PRESENCE OF MIND.—A notorious bully was lately disappointed of an expected triumph, by the following stratagem.—The bully had insisted on fighting a man, (a stranger) who had done nothing to offend him, and who was scarcely more than half his size.—The bully stripped. His unwilling antagonist opened the door of the room, saying he would call in somebody to see fair play.—A person in the adjoining apartment instantly brushed in, and said he would "take care that no foul play should take place;" and looking earnestly at the unwilling combatant, "Hark you, (said he) how did you manage about the man that you killed in Wales?"—"Oh, (replied he, quite as seriously) I got clear. I only killed him in fair fighting. They could not hurt me."—The bully, hearing the first part of this short dialogue, gathered up his clothes, with as little noise as possible; and, by the time it was finished, having completely secured a retreat, he faced his antagonist, with—"Good morning to thee; d-mn thee, thou shalt not kill me;" and ran off as fast as his legs would carry him.

Two Oxonians dining together, one of them noticing a spot of grease on the neckcloth of his companion, said, "I see you are a Grecian." "Pooh!" said the other, "that's a stale pun." "No, indeed," said the punster, "I made it on the spot."

THE EXILES.

NAPOLEON'S brother and late Queen,
May both in exile go;
The French may not have JOSEPHINE,
The Spaniards won't have JOE!

IN the trial of the cause "Leaf v. King," in the civil court at Lincoln assizes, a humourous repartee occurred:—Mr. Copley, counsel for the defendant, maintained in his address to the jury, that the case of the plaintiff was very insufficiently made out, for he had in fact produced only one witness; that witness was a bailiff named Green: the other person who had been called, Mr. F. Johnson, the bailiff's assistant, was bound to say whatever his principal said; and therefore the two were, to the intents and purposes of justice, but one witness. "What," said Justice Grose, "you look upon them in the light of man and wife, do you, Mr. Copley?" "Ay, my Lord, to be sure," replied the witty barrister, "and I will maintain, against any man, that a bailiff and his bum are but one flesh, all the world over!" The court was convulsed with laughter.

A CONFECTIONER and bookseller, however strange it may appear, may be said to be of the same trade, for both deal in works of taste.

A CITIZEN lately brought his wife and daughters from Brighton, by threatening them, that if they "absented" themselves any longer "without leave," they should be cashiered.

A SMALL pug bitch is described in an advertisement as being "extremely timid, and her complexion rather delicate."

SPORT-

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

THE following gentlemen are appointed Stewards for Edinburgh Races, 1811, viz.—

Hon. Colonel Duff.

Sir John Pringle, of Stitchell, Bart.

J. Macleod, of Macleod, Esq.

J. Hamilton Dundas, of Duddingstone, Esq.

THE following are appointed Stewards for Lamberton Races, 1811, viz.—Lord Montgomerie, Alexander Don, Esq. C. J. Brandling, Esq. M. P. and General Maitland.

EDMUND Yates, Esq. of Bury, Lancashire, has purchased of Chas. Smith Esq. of Summer-Castle, Cheshire, a colt foal, by St. George, out of his favourite mare, Hebe, for 200gs.—Hebe was purchased at the late Mr. Ackers's sale.

LORD Darlington has sold Rubens, (own Brother to Castrel and Selim) by Buzzard, for 1300gs.—He is intended to cover next season, at Wheeler's Farm, near Wokingham, Berks.—And Sir H. M. Mainwaring, Bart. has purchased Castrel, who is advertised to cover next season, at the Royals, near Nantwich, Cheshire.

D. CLAUGHTON, Esq. of Newton, Lancashire, has refused 1000 guineas for his stallion, Newcastle, by Waxy.—He was purchased at the late Mr. Ackers's sale.

WE are informed that Colonel Childers has sold the favourite stallion Stamford, for 1000 guineas, to go abroad.

MR. Kirby has sold Royal Prince, by Cheshire-Cheese, to Sir Charles Douglas, for 600gs.

York August Meeting, 1811.—Monday, Lord Fitzwilliam's Cervantes against Major Wheatley's Sir Petronell, 8st. 7lb. each, four miles, 500gs. and 500gs. bye.

Horncastle Fair.—This greatest fair for horses in England, has supplied the London market with some hundreds, which have since reached town. The Prince of Wales was the purchaser of eight carriage horses from Milton, and seven saddle horses from Dyson. The Driving Clubs have all been inspecting. The demand for cavalry horses was very great during the whole fair, and numbers still wanted for different regiments.

MR. Chaplin of Southwell-Hall, sold six hunters at the above fair, at first hand, for 800 guineas.

ON the first day of the late races at Londonderry, a very whimsical equipage appeared on the course. It consisted of a common wheel car, having on it a Kish, or a Creel, on which a gentleman sat driving a pair of asses tandem, and occasionally blowing a horn. He was preceded by a servant on a poney, and followed by two others, mounted on sorry jades of car horses, making altogether, if not as grand an appearance, certainly more noise than than any other retinue at the course. Another gentleman, who, it seems, considered himself aggrieved by the procession, laid his cane with such force to the head and shoulders of the Creelteer, that he had like to have at once deprived him of his seat and his horses.

Isle of Wight, August 30.—The match for 200 guineas, between Mr. Harvey's b. c. Young Waxy, by Waxy, and Mr. Thatcher's b. g. Maggot, by Spear, four-mile heats, was decided in favour of the former, the horses coming in as under:

Mr. Harvey's Young Waxy, 4 yrs old, 8st. 6lb.	1	0	1
Mr. Thatcher's Maggot, aged, 10st.	2	0	2

At starting, five to one against Young Waxy.—This was a most capital race, the first heat being well contested, the second a dead heat, and the third won by half a neck only.

To the Editor of the York Herald.

Sir,—An incorrect statement of the event of the two-yrs old Sweepstakes, run for at Stockton, on Thursday, the 30th of August, 1810, having appeared in several newspapers, which may cause an improper decision of the bets depending upon that race, I feel it a duty to submit the following facts through the channel of your Paper.

Mr. Hutchinson's filly was not nominated until Sunday the first of April, the Stakes having closed on the preceding day. The Stewards of the races, therefore, protested against her running, would not see the rider weighed at starting, and peremptorily refused his being weighed after the race, and he was not weighed. The Stewards have officially adjudged the Stakes of sixty guineas to me, being the amount for the three horses that were legally entered.

An appeal will be made, as soon as possible, to the Jockey Club.

Wm. Milburne.

Stockton, Sept. 12, 1810.

Lord Kingston had made a considerable bet, that he would shoot forty brace of partridges on the 1st of September, on his manor at Heydon. His Lordship shot forty-one brace and an half before sun-set.

Mr. Farquharson and Mr. Richard Pollen started on the 1st inst. on Mr. Farquharson's manor of Gunville, to decide their bet, that they should on that day kill fifty brace of birds. The lateness of the harvest, and the state of the weather, were circumstances so unfavourable, that five to four, and at length seven to four, were repeatedly betted against them. Great reliance was however place on their dogs, which are chiefly of the Norfolk breed, and are supposed to be the best in the country. The gentlemen shot with spirit till near two o'clock, and then gave in, from excessive fatigue, having killed thirty-seven brace of birds, and lost their bets by thirteen brace. Mr. Pollen killed 19½ brace, Mr. Farquharson 17½.

Captain Clayton, the celebrated shot, made a considerable bet that he would kill twenty brace of partridges on the 1st of September.—Six to four were betted against him; but he killed twenty-two brace by three o'clock on that day.

On Wednesday, the 12th inst. a gentleman, within a short distance of Worcester, killed a hare and a brace of partridges at one shot! The

The hare was the object of his fire, and the birds happening to be at a short distance on the ground, in a strait direction, will account for this very extraordinary occurrence, which may be relied on as a fact.—Worcester Herald.

The moor game in the northern parts of England and Scotland have been plentiful, in spite of the custom now much practised on the moors of burning heath, to renew the growth of it. The pursuit of the game, owing to the late sultry weather, was very fatiguing, and the conveyance of it to London proportionably difficult.

A partridge having a nest near the dwelling-house of Mr. Pocock, of Enford Farm, near Everly, Wilts, a hen from the yard laid two eggs in it, which were hatched before those of the partridge. (A hen sits on her eggs three weeks only, and a partridge a month.)—The partridge left the nest with the two chickens, and one of which (nearly full grown) now follows the old bird from field to field. The other chicken was caught, when young, by Mr. Pocock's nephew, and put with others in the farm-yard.

The members of Mr. Farquharson's hunt have given up their house at Buckland, and the club, we understand, is removed to Maiden-Newton. This alteration will contribute much to the convenience of strangers visiting Dorsetshire, as they will be enabled, in the present situation of the club, to find those accommodations, both for themselves and their horses, which the limits of Buckland denied.

Boxing.—A battle was fought for 100 guineas, on Monday, Sept. 3, at Thorney, Hants, where Flowers, the provincial champion, vanquished a good man, of superior weight, from Shropshire, on the 19th ult. This match was made at the time by the Colonel who backed Flowers, on one side, and a Mr. Page on the other. The Colonel's man was George Tiffing, a coppersmith, and his adversary was Joe Grant, a Gloucestershire man, each weighing fifteen stone, and measuring about six feet. They set to like bottom men, and were both knocked down. The only science, which was but trifling, was possessed by Tiffing, who could stop with his left hand, and this apparent slight advantage brought him through. In twenty minutes the men were only known apart by their small clothes, they were so dreadfully beat. They were both right and left handed men, and it was any body's battle when twenty-five minutes had expired. They were both game, but nature first forsook Grant, and victory was whispered to the winner to his inexpressible joy. There were several hundred spectators present, and twenty guineas were gathered for the loser.

On Monday, Sept. 10, two celebrated boxers were to have entertained the inhabitants of Hales-Owen and its neighbourhood, with speciments of the fistic science; but when put to the test, their courage "oozed out at their fingers' ends." In order, however, that the good folks might not be disappointed, a man of the name of James Green challenged another man, who was very averse thereto, and insisted upon his fighting; in the second round, Green received an unfortunate blow on his left side, which brought him to the ground, and killed him on the spot. A Coroner's Inquest was held on the body, and and brought in their verdict, Manslaughter. The brother of Green, who was ill at Kingswinford, having the circumstance mentioned to him too abruptly, died in the course of a short period after, and they were both interred in the same grave.

A BOY, eleven years of age, being intrusted by his master, who lives at Harpole, near Northampton, on Tuesday, the 11th instant, to carry a loaded gun some distance, wantonly levelled it at several persons, and at last discharged it among a groupe of pretty little innocents, who were playing at a cottage door. The young wretch seems to have followed them into an inner apartment of the cottage before he took aim, and they had all crept into a corner, as if to protect themselves. One out of the five was shot dead, and the others so badly wounded that doubts are entertained of their recovery. The juvenile miscreant has been committed on a charge of wilful murder, such being the verdict of the Coroner's Jury.

ON the 5th Sept. as the gamekeeper of S. Worrall, Esq. Town Clerk of Bristol, was getting through a hedge with his gun upon the cock in his hand, a briar caught the trigger, and the gun going off, the contents passed through the unfortunate man's heart, who instantly expired.

ON an information brought before the Magistrates of Lewes during the present month, respecting the legality of playing at Loo, as practised in the libraries at Brighton, a decision was given in the affirmative, to the no small satisfaction of the proprietors, as well as the sporting ladies.

THE 14th inst. J. Palliser, chimney-sweeper, was convicted before the Magistrates at the Town-hall, in Ripon, of poaching fish in the river Ure, and sentenced to six months imprisonment in the House of Correction!

Hewett's Lady Earn.—Three to 1 agst Laurel Leaf, 5 to 2 agst Julius Cæsar.

Oriana, and Major Wheatley's Sir Marrinell.—The Judge placed only four; thirty-two paid forfeit.—Twelve to 1 agst Octavian, 4 to 1 agst Recollection, 5 to 4 and 11 to 8 agst Oriana, 100 to 6 agst Sir Marrinell, 8 to 1 agst Mr. Garforth's gr. c. 100 to 6 agst Atalanta.

POETRY.

POETRY.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

NEW SPECIES OF MODERN SONNET.

Scene—Grub Street.

THE Poet sits at a table in one corner of the room, while his wife is preparing dinner in another, and the children are grubbing about the floor, playing with a couple of cats, and with each other: the consequence is, that the poet is interrupted at the end of every stanza, which produces the following effect:—

ON the billowy surges borne along,
Britain's best bulwark tow'rs in pride elate;
Heedless of storms the sailor tunes his song;
"Zounds! wife, you're mad, you've broke our last new plate!!"

The battle comes! loud roar the cannons round!
And death-like ruin seems to threaten all;
The seaman constant to his post is found;
"Oh! curse the cats, how cruelly they squall!"

Vict'ry declares for Britain's pow'rful arms;
Britain, who ocean's farthest bound'ry rules;
Mercy now shews her soft and dove-like charms;—
"Those children roar like forty thousand bulls!
Oh! noise and ruin! foes to fluent rhyme!
I've spoil'd my sonnet! and I've lost my time!!!"

LINES ON THE DEATH OF GROWLER,

A TERRIER.

REJOICE, ye cats; ye rats, rejoice;
Tremble no more at Growler's voice;
For Growler's life is fled.
Afflictions dire long time he bore;
The dread distemper vex'd him sore,
And Growler then was bled.

But what avail'd the doctor's art?
He could, alas! no aid impart;
Physicians were in vain:
Water gush'd out from both his eyes;
The yard resounded with his cries,
For great was Growler's pain.

Reflect, ye gay, licentious proud,
His ribs how lean, his cries how loud,
He scorns his daily meat—
When lo! the coachman, entering in,
Saw, in a fit, poor Growler grin;
Convulsions shake his feet.

'Tis past! his dream of life is o'er;
I, that ne'er wept for dog before,
Strain'd out a tear or two:
Next morn, in solemn, sad array,
A crowd of dogs at break of day,
His fate untimely rue.

The rats and vermin, once a year,
Assemblies hold and concerts hear,
And dance around his tomb:
Hence, late posterity of cats,
Toads, caterpillars, snails and bats,
Shall know poor Growler's doom.

But ye, who prize his worth so well;
Spring, who's his aunt, and Blush and Bell,
Respect the youthful pup:
And (when invited by a mole,
You meditate the latent hole)
O, pray, don't dig him up!!!

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

THE following didactic Poem, written by the Hon. Charles Coote, Esq. having been out of print more than thirty years, the re-publication of it in your valuable Miscellany, may afford information and amusement to some of your numerous readers, and will oblige your occasional correspondent,

THE TRUE ART OF SHOOTING FLYING.

YE rural sportsmen lend an ear,
Attend my song, my precepts hear;
When love and sleep have crown'd the night,
Arise from slumber with the light;
When eastern streaks their beams display,
Arise, be clad, and haste away.
And should thy wife display her charms,
In rapture clasp thee in her arms;

Regardless of such wheedling art
With speed arise, with speed depart.
Tell her your health some air requires,
To kindle love's extinguish'd fires;
That exercise about the fields,
A keen and hearty stomach yields;
'Twill brace the nerves, rejoice the heart,
Replete with vigour ev'ry part.

A sporting ne'er presume to come
Without a little cordial rum;
A proper wicker-bottle fill,
That will contain about a gill.
If sick, a gulp will make you well;
'Twill keep out air, the wind expell;
And, should the gripes or colic seize ye,
A little dram will quickly ease ye;
Or, if your spirits fail, a dram
Adds vigour to pursue the game.

But let your prudent care be such
As not to drink a draught too much;
A sup is good to keep you warm,
A sup too much will do you harm:
For if a dram too much you take,
It will your sight unsteady make;
'Twill blunt your eyes, and spoil your aim,
And then, my friend, farewell the game!
A morning sot, without dispute,
Can never aim, though he may shoot.

The marksman should the bottle spare,
At least of all excess beware;
If you a dram unwisely take,
Some fatal step perhaps you'll make;
The turkies slay, the geese destroy,
In mischief all the day employ.

Procure your tackle, gun and all,
And then your cheerful pointers call,
But, prithee, don't forget to bring
Into the field a partridge-wing,
And having cleans'd, with utmost care,
The touch-hole from the dust and smear,
Proceed to charge and prime the gun,
(This must not over-night be done;
For, if 'tis loaded over-night,
The prime will hiss, and not be right.)
Prime not too full, 'twill merit blame;
The hanging fire will spoil your aim:
The reason is, if I must tell,
The pressure does the flame repel.

In charging, those who most excell
Take care to ram the powder well;
But, then, it must not be forgot
To ram with tenderness, the shot:
One third of nitrous dust will do,
And take of shot the other two:
Then search for tow, the whole to close,
The fittest thing that can be chose.

Be careful to observe my hints,
Provide turnscrew, worm and flints;
For, though no accident arise,
To guard against them must be wise.

For who would venture o'er a den
Of rogues and thieves, and highwaymen,
Without a weapon of defence?
The answer's plain—no man of sense.

Perhaps the reader may object,
And say, he might not be attack'd;
I grant it true, but if he should
The weapons then might do him good;
And if you thus for chance prepare,
You may your accidents repair.

When thus equipp'd your sport pursue,
Regardless of the dirt or dew:
The loit'ring fool should keep in bed,
And there repose his drowsy head.
Let pamper'd mortals stay at home,
Such wretches are unfit to come;
Whoever fails in any part,
Can ne'er be master of the art.

Not eager, or without concern,
A medium in your actions learn.
Be sure take time—the chiefest rule
That's practis'd in the marksman's school;
Most giddy youths the sport confound,
By firing on improper ground.

True sportsmen, Stoic-like should be,
Quite easy, unconcern'd, and free;

Not-

Not eager firing off at random,
Or let a tim'rous fear command 'em.

Suppose me going with a friend,
In rural sports the day to spend;
Suppose we saw a pheasant sprung,
His flutt'ring wings the vallies rung!
Behold he mounts!—take aim, and fire;
Well done! You've granted my desire!—
He's down! Well done, I do declare,
You've done your business to a hair.—
Quick, quick! Recharge! don't let it rest,
And to your dogs repose the rest:
Recharge! before the air gets in,
To loiter is a shame and sin;
The barrel will the powder heat,
And make the charge the more complete;
The touch-hole too, if haste you make,
More freely will the powder take:
Some, unacquainted with the art,
Will fall to cleansing every part;
Until the piece has lost its heat,
And there succeeds a clammy sweat.

And if the bird be slightly touch'd,
And down she sits, most slily couch'd;
When you the victim go to take,
She may a second effort make,
And soar, with broken flight, away,
While you lament th' escaping prey:
For pheasants very often rise,
And mount, with broken flight, the skies;
A bird that I've concluded slain,
I've often seen to rise again;
And some to distant covert fly,
To droop, and agonizing die.

Woodcocks, and snipes, escape but rare,
When in the wing they wounded are;
But pheasants very seldom lie,
With mortal wounds they often fly.

A partridge sprung, Sir, Ha! she's gone!
You'd time enough!—you shot too soon!
Not twenty yards in sight!—for shame!
You don't deserve a marksman's name—
You'd kill'd her with a proper aim!
Permit her forty yards to go,
The gun will surer mischief sow.
But when too near, the case is this,
You either mangle her, or miss;
And, if too far, you slightly wound,
Nor make the game descend to ground:
In shooting all extremes refuse;
Take my advice—a medium choose.

But when the trees confound the scene,
You cannot keep the golden mean;
When woodcocks dodge we know no laws,
Necessity admits no pause.

In ersh of barley, oats, or wheat,
Where charming quail and partridge sit;
Or, in the springs, where lovely snipe
Will bore, to please its appetite;
Or where the polt, in open heath,
Moves in an even line from death,
There, if the piece be fully prov'd,
Pursue the mark when far remov'd;
Raise up the mouth above the game,
And fire away with careful aim.
But judge before you execute;
Take aim, and not at random shoot.

The cock is indirect in flight,
Like rapid lightning flies the snipe,
Till distance overcomes her fright;
Then straight along they gently fly,
And, slightly wounded, fall and lie.
By length and motion of their wings,
(Which are such long and cumb'rous things)
So easy maim'd, when twenty fall,
Perhaps none dead amongst them all.

When snipes receive a mortal wound,
With steady wings they skim around;
Expanded open, like a kite,
They smoothly swim till spent in flight;
And where they fall sans motion lie,
And seldom move, but silent die.

(To be concluded in our next.)

ON THE DOCILITY OF THE HORSE.

THE following elegant lines are taken from an energetic, humane, and much-esteemed Poem, entitled "The Lower World," lately published by the justly celebrated Mr. Pratt; they will be admired by every person of taste and sensibility, and must be particularly interesting to the enlightened and benevolent, who are in the habit of treating with proper kindness the animals dependent on them for protection.

SEE how yon courser, unconstrain'd and free,
Grateful repays his hour of liberty!
Leaps from his couch upon the verdant ground,
And makes an echo at each glad rebound;
He loves his master's figure, loves his call,
And not reluctant, follows to the stall;
No slavish curb, no fetter he requires,
A patron beckons, and a friend inspires:
E'en, when in chains, so gentle is the sway,
With service pleas'd, in bondage he is gay;
Bends to the saddle, champs the bit in sport,

And seems the burthen of his lord to court;
From dawn to night-fall traverses the land,
Cheer'd by the well-known voice, and fondling hand.
The way-worn horse of labour next comes on,
And for the goodly service freely done,
Preserv'd from toil, and rescued from the knife,
Enjoys secure a soft retreat for life;
The vacant hunter leaves his green recess,
Or bow'ring tree, to share the wish'd caress;
Of meadow, and of shed, allowed the range,
He finds a shelter for each season's change;
And happy oft' invited to the spot,
Where stands his gen'rous master's smiling cot,
Gains ready entrance at the good man's door,
Who sighs to think the days of youth are o'er;
Then strokes the hoary front, or silver mane,
And gently leads him to the fields again.
The sober ox, and placid sheep at feed,
Advance to greet the master of the mead;
The feather'd home-tribes, too, quick gather round,
Hear his glad summons, and obey the sound;
With songs of pleasure hail the early day,
And varied orisons delighted pay,
Their evening incense offer at his shrine,
And own, indeed, the "human face divine."
All seem to pay a blessing at his hands,
While in the midst, e'en like some God he stands.

THE LOVE OF COUNTRY AND OF HOME.

THERE is a land of ev'ry land the pride,
Beloved by Heaven o'er all the world beside;
Where brighter suns dispense serener light,
And milder moons emparadise the night;
A land of beauty, virtue, valour, truth,
Time-tutor'd age, and love-exalted youth:
The wandering mariner, whose eye explores
The wealthiest isles, the most enchanting shores,
Views not a realm so bountiful and fair,
Nor breathes the spirit of a purer air;
In every clime the magnet of his soul,
Touch'd by remembrance, trembles to that pole;
For in this land of Heaven's peculiar grace,
The heritage of nature's noblest race,
There is a spot of earth, supremely blest,
A dearer, sweeter spot than all the rest,
Where man, Creation's tyrant, casts aside
His sword and sceptre, pageantry, and pride,
While in his soften'd looks benignly blend
The sire, the son, the husband, father, friend:
Here woman reigns; the mother, daughter, wife,
Strews with fresh flowers the narrow way of life;
In the clear heav'n of her delightful eye,
An angel-guard of loves and graces lie;
Around her knees domestic duties meet,
And fire-side pleasures gamble at her feet.
"Where shall that land, that spot of earth be found?"
Art thou a man?—a patriot?—look around?
O thou shalt find, howe'er thy footsteps roam,
That land thy Country, and that spot thy Home!

IMPROMPTU,

On seeing a battle between an Exciseman and a Tailor, on the Bowling-green, at Frodsham, a short time ago.

A Bowling-green, not many miles from hence,
Was sometimes visited by men of sense,
To spend the evenings, and to spend their pence,
Till interrupted by a Savage brute,
Who came on purpose to create dispute,
And set two valiant combatants at strife,
In dire contention, staking life for life:
A Mr. Gauge, with much Salopian pride,
Self-consequence, and qualities beside;
Which, by a skilful inch-stick, might be made
Useful, well-manag'd to the dipping trade:
But too much froth and fermentation, prove
Want of solid sense, and much self-love:
And shall the ninth part of a man presume
To pace the green, where I so often come?
Sirrah, begone, hence from my presence fly!
But Snip was not so ready to comply.
From such like words, to blows they quickly fell,
The sad event what Tongue can truly tell?
For Gauge was vanquish'd, and triumphant Goose
Now walks the green, not subject to abuse:
With bruised front, o'erwhelmed with disgrace,
Poor Gauge sneak'd off—to hide his batter'd face.
